

Gulf Oil Tried To Buy Political Muscle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gulf Oil Corp. initiated a $10 million to $12 million program of political donations at home and overseas because the company concluded it was the only way to get attention, a special corporate review committee reported Tuesday.

The committee said it had not been able to track the ultimate recipients of all the money generated over a 13-year period, partly because the company's top lobbyist is under investigation by the Watergate special prosecutor and did not provide the committee with complete testimony, the report said.

What the lobbyist, Claude C. Wild Jr., did tell the committee was that Archie D. Gray, a now-deceased senior vice president of Gulf, asked him in 1959 to "build an organization around the country that would give Gulf some 'muscle' in politics."

The report said that the hiring of Wild followed Gulf's announcement in 1958 that the company was determined to take an increasingly active interest in practical politics.

In setting up the program, Gray "decried arbitrary import quotas for oil, attacks on the depletion allowance, conflicting regulatory schemes and the lack of consideration afforded Gulf's efforts to present facts to governmental investigating committees," the report said.

The review committee set the estimate of Gulf's political donations in the 13 years at $12.3 million. Gulf originally had estimated the donations at $10.3 million, but the committee tacked on Canadian, Swedish and Italian contributions which had previously been conceded by Gulf but not originally considered as in the same category as the initial estimate.

Gulf ended political donations in 1972, when the Watergate special prosecutor began investigating donations of $125,000 to the presidential campaigns of Richard M. Nixon, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., and Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark. Gulf and Wild eventually pleaded guilty to making illegal contributions and received fines.

The special prosecutor has reopened the case, however, on the basis of information generated in a Securities and Exchange Commission case against Gulf and Wild.

The composition of the three-member committee was cleared by the SEC. John J. McCloy, a former State Department official and White House troubleshooter, was the chairman, assisted by Gulf directors Beverley Matthews and Nathan W. Pearson.

The report was submitted to U.S. District Court under terms of a consent settlement of the SEC charges against Gulf. Wild is fighting the charges, which involved alleged violations of securities laws in failing to disclose the contributions.

Although the SEC has accused several corporations of making illegal contributions domestically or overseas, the Gulf report is the most comprehensive and detailed to date.

The committee recommended that Gulf make no illegal gifts in the future, but added that the company should feel free to make contributions "in conformity with the laws and customs of the country in which it is operating" as long as the activity is legal.

The committee said Gray's program involved a system of funneling corporate money to Gulf's

Bahamas Exploration Co subsidiary so the money couldn't be traced. Then, it said, dispersal was made through such devices as Swiss bank accounts and sealed envelopes delivered in person to U.S. politicians in the administration, Congress, state legislatures, regulatory commissions and mayoral races.

Most of the recipients of Gulf money had been identified earlier as information trickled out of the case in the form of depositions taken from persons associated with the operation.

Wild used three assistants from his own Washington office and seven regional vice presidents of Gulf to distribute the money because, as the committee quoted him as saying, "it was physically impossible for one man to handle that kind of money."

Appropriations Boost Possible

By DON WALTON
Star Staff Writer

State tax fund appropriations for the coming year would be increased by 8.6%, according to tentative decisions of the Legislature's Appropriations Committee.

A final compilation of those decisions was given to The Star Tuesday upon request.

Reached during four days of hearings earlier this month, the decisions are not only tentative, but incomplete.

Nevertheless, they point the way toward a likely pattern of state appropriations in the fiscal year which begins July 1.

In most cases, the decisions are likely to stand more as a base than as a ceiling for future committee deliberation.

$358.2 Million Total
State tax supported general fund appropriations tentatively approved for state operations and aid total $358.2 million.

That is $28.3 million more than the current $329.9 million level of appropriations.

The $329.9 million figure represents 1975-76 appropriations after adjustments approved by a special legislative session in November. At that time, some agencies were subjected to 3% budget cuts from the level approved for them by the Legislature six months earlier.

Budget proposals charted on Page 10

Federal Funds Lost

But the $28.3 million increase in general fund appropriations does not represent a similar hike in state spending. Many millions of those general fund dollars merely replace lost federal funds or supply mandated increases in state reimbursements to local government.

Tentative figures show the University of Nebraska with the largest dollar increase in general fund appropriations. But the biggest tentative percentage hike in state tax support would go to the Legislature itself, through the Legislative Council.

(A larger general fund boost shows up on paper in the Department of Environmental Control — but most of that money represents state matching funds for local waste treatment facilities.)

The general fund hike for legislative operations from $3 million to $4.1 million represents an increase of more than 36%.

$11.5 Million Boost

While NU's general fund increase would be 15%, it represents $11.5 million. That's a jump from $76.9 million to $88.4 million.

State colleges received a 10% hike, from $11.3 million to $12.5 million.

Among the largest spending agencies, the Department of Public Institutions received a particularly small general fund increase — from $27.9 million to $28.7 million, about 3%.

The Department of Public Welfare's boost from $42.1 million to $44.2 million would be about 5%.

Most of the $5.9 million general fund hike in the Department of Revenue's budget goes to increased homestead tax exemption payments to local government.

Decisions Incomplete

Among agencies whose decisions are incomplete are the Department of Administrative Services (DAS) and the Crime Commission.

The committee, in effect, provided no funding for the state office of planning and programming in DAS or for Crime Commission programs other than the law enforcement training center in order to force the agencies to justify their operations.

Four state agencies would receive more than $100 million in funding from all sources. They are Welfare, NU, the Department of Roads and the Department of Education.

State aid to schools is included in the latter's budget.

The university is the biggest spender of general fund dollars.

In Bill Form

The committee's tentative decisions will be presented to the Legislature in bill form next month.

Sen. Richard Marvel of Hastings plans to schedule January hearings on the bill, or bills, when state agency administrators can ask for more funding.

Final committee decisions would then be presented to the Legislature in the form of amended appropriations bills.

Great Plains Drought Forecast

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

Nebraska and the Great Plains may soon face a venomous event which has almost imperceptible beginnings but which could snake into global severity.

"I would bet my belt buckle, we're going to have a drought," Dr. Norman J. Rosenberg says matter-of-factly.

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln agricultural engineering professor harbors no doomsday lurch, but points to scientific evidence and trends in climatic change.

The facts indicate that "the late '70s are a prime candidate for drought in the Great Plains," Rosenberg said. Even if it should occur a few years later, "it's inevitable."

Short As '30s

Already, said Prof. Donald G. Hanway, "We are as short of stored subsoil moisture as we were in the '30s' during the Dust Bowl era. The UNL agronomy department chairman explained that the 5 to 6-foot-deep root zone in most areas of Nebraska is "completely dry."

And "next year can be very critical," Dr. Hanway said.

"A drought is of concern to everyone," not just farmers, said State Agriculture Department Director Glenn Kreuscher. It "can certainly rob the state of many millions of dollars."

Rosenberg says drought has and can again cause the entire economy to "go sour." People fleeing hard times could pour out of Nebraska and the region, mental illness could increase for those who stay, and the effect on the marketplace could shudder throughout the globe.

If Rosenberg will keep the buckle on his belt intact, he also wants to avoid tightening it suffocatingly. To help prevent disasters locally and worldwide, he and a group of UNL scholars have a proposal pending before the National Science Foundation to develop a Nebraska drought strategy.

The drought question arises after a summer of little rain and so far a winter of little snow, conditions which preceded the great drought of the 1930s.

The UNL agricultural meteorology section leader, Rosenberg spent a working holiday sandwiched between his desk and ceiling-high shelves jammed with monthly weather reviews and ag meteorology reports dating years back.

He said the theory that current conditions will lead to drought in 1976 has little credence. But cycles of drought are "in our history," Rosenberg said, ticking off what includes a list of current events inseparable from ongoing effects of significant world climate changes.

For example, "serious" droughts occurred in 1972 in the Soviet Union, precipitating the controversial U.S. wheat deal, and from 1969 to 1974 in Sahelian Africa, Rosenberg said. India was also affected by climate changes which initiated the droughts.

Rosenberg is actually a micro-meteorologist, who studies such things as evaporation and windbreaks. But as a member of the National Academy of Sciences Committee on Atmospheric Science, he and his colleagues are finding reason for "more than passing scientific curiosity" in drought.

He loosely categorized such students of drought three ways. First, there are those who maintain that world conditions are changing as a cooling trend intensifies, for instance, from shifts in the jet stream pattern and high pressure zones.

The second school of thought, which Rosenberg identifies with, favors cycles over climatic change. It holds that past phenomena will reoccur regularly or predictably within some wide range.

Mail Hike Not Blocked

Washington (AP) — With less than six hours to go before the deadline, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger refused on Tuesday to block a postal rate hike which will increase the cost of a 10-cent stamp to 13 cents.

Former Postmaster General J. Edward Day, representing bulk mailers, had asked Burger to reverse Monday's U.S. Court of Appeals decision which cleared the way for the increases to go into effect.

In a brief order, Burger refused to do so. He gave no reason.

The Postal Service says the new rates would be effective at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday.

The agency said it needed the increases because it is losing $225 million per month under present rates. The increases amount to an estimated $2.5 billion per year.

Major Lobbyists Faced With Disclosure Law

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of five articles in a series by The Star's political writer.)

By DON WALTON
Star Staff Writer

Major lobbyists who attempt to influence decisions in either the legislative or executive branches of government may be required for the first time to disclose the amount of compensation they receive for each job.

The requirement would be instituted into law by voter enactment of the proposed Nebraska Political Reform Act of 1976.

Good government makes it "necessary that the identity, expenditures and activities of persons who engage in significant efforts to influence governmental action be regularly disclosed to the public," the proposed new law states.

$1,000 Per Year

Only major lobbyists and lobbying agents — those who spend more than $1,000 for lobbying purposes during a year or who are compensated at more than $1,000 a year for lobbying — would be required to register and report.

They would file quarterly reports with the new Fair Political Practices Commission — and monthly reports while the Legislature is in session.

In addition to the sums which the lobbyist spends or a lobbyist agent receives as reimbursement or compensation for his or her work, the reports would also include an identification of the issues with which he or she is concerned and "a general description of his position on each."

Itemized Expenditures

The reports would include an account of all expenditures, separately identified as food and beverages for public officials, advertising and mass mailing expenses, office expenses and other costs.

Each expenditure of $100 or more would include the name and address of the recipient.

Expenditures for food and beverages provided to a public official must be itemized separately if the costs exceed $50 in any month or $150 for the year. In such a case, the official must be named in the report.

One who is required to register as a lobbyist or a lobbyist agent would be prohibited from giving a gift in excess of $10 value in any one-month period to any official in the executive or legislative branch of state government. They could, however, provide duly reported campaign contributions.

Loans To Officials

Any loan by a lobbyist of more than $15 to a public official or a member of his family must be reported.

If the lobbyist is a trade or professional association, its report must include the names and addresses of its 20 largest contributors of $100 or more or its entire membership list.

The names of any public official, family or staff member employed by a lobbyist must also be reported.

Any business transactions between a lobbyist and a public official's business interests involving $500 or more must be reported.

No official in the executive or legislative branch would be allowed to engage in sufficient lobbying to require registration for at least two years after he or she leaves state government.

It would be unlawful for any person to instigate the introduction of any legislation for the purpose of obtaining employment opposing its enactment.

And no lobbyist could receive compensation contingent on the outcome of an administrative or legislative action.

The lobbying law would take effect on Jan. 1, 1978.

volving $500 or more must be reported.

No official in the executive or legislative branch would be allowed to engage in sufficient lobbying to require registration for at least two years after he or she leaves state government.

It would be unlawful for any person to instigate the introduction of any legislation for the purpose of obtaining employment opposing its enactment.

And no lobbyist could receive compensation contingent on the outcome of an administrative or legislative action.

The lobbying law would take effect on Jan. 1, 1978.

Female Doctor Tortured In Nude

... In Chilean Prison

LONDON (AP) — Dr. Sheila Cassidy, a British physician held by Chile's military junta for two months, arrived here Tuesday and claimed she was stripped naked and tortured by interrogators in prison. Britain immediately recalled its ambassador in Chile in protest.

Dr. Cassidy flew into London's Gatwick airport from Santiago in borrowed clothes and told newsmen: "I was stripped naked and tied down to a bed. I was tortured for up to an hour at a time."

The sandy-haired 38-year-old physician, who was accused of treating a wounded left-wing guerrilla, was released in Santiago on Monday after weeks of diplomatic pressure by Britain.

The Foreign Office in London said British Ambassador Reginald Seconde will be withdrawn "indefinitely" and that the government will submit evidence to the United Nations Human Rights Commission on Dr. Cassidy's torture allegations.

The government also lodged a strong protest to the Chilean government and demanded a full inquiry into the allegations.

Chilean Foreign Ministry official.

No statement was issued by Chile's military government and a spokesman would only say, "There are no instructions for the moment, it is being analyzed."

The Chilean embassy in London denied that Dr. Cassidy was tortured while she was held in Santiago's Tres Alamos prison.

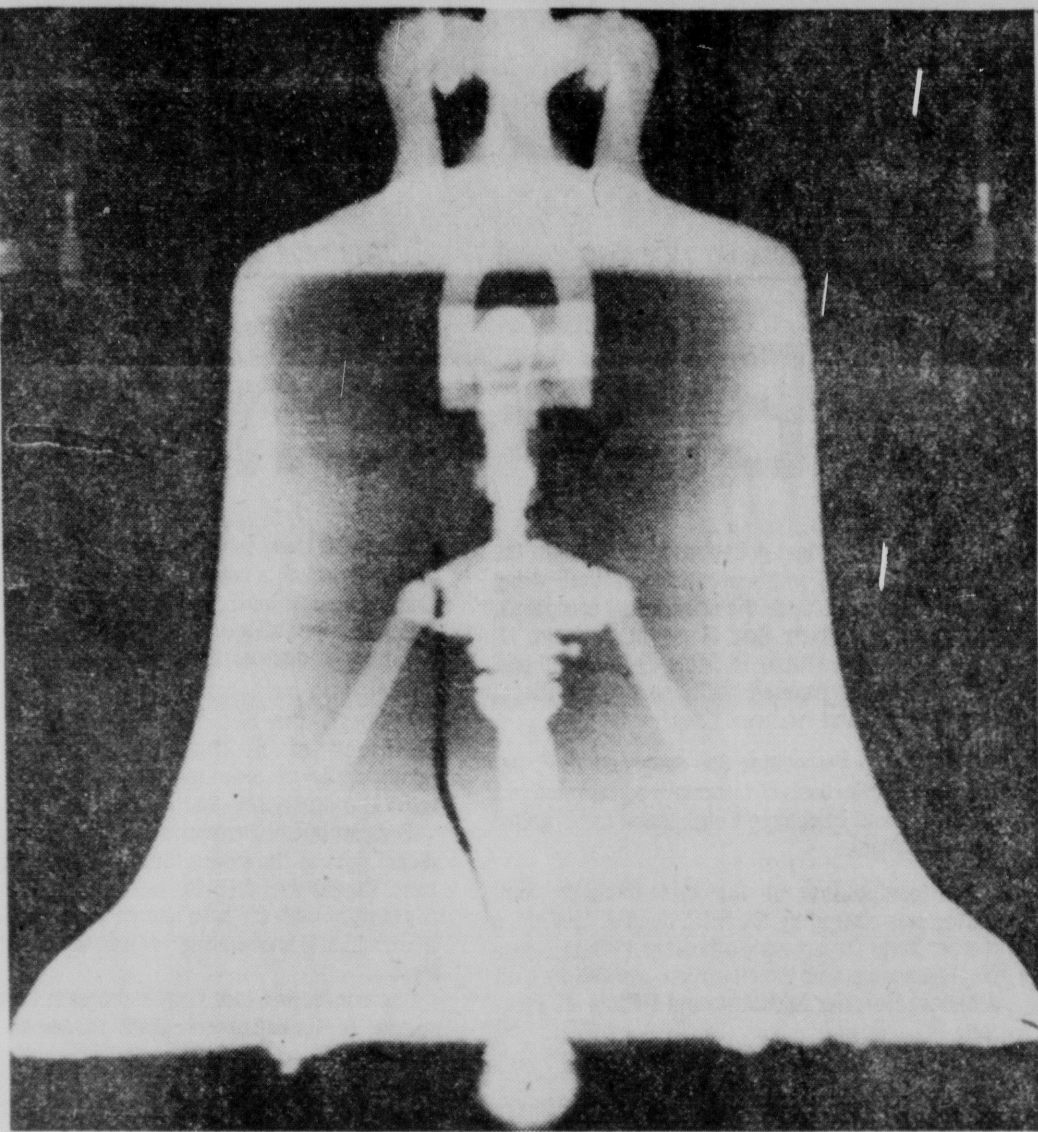

Dr. Cassidy was arrested Nov. 1 on charges of treating a wounded left-wing guerrilla shot earlier in a gunfight with troops near the Roman Catholic mission hospital where she worked.

Dr. Cassidy denied on arrival in London that she had been politically active before her arrest.

She said that when police raided the hospital hunting the guerrillas she hid in a bathroom. But the police officers broke down the door to get her, she said.

"The first night after my arrest," she said, "I was tortured with electric shocks on three separate occasions."

"At first I told a completely invented story. I was desperate to save the lives of the missionary priests I was helping."

Not Bad For A 222-Year-Old Bell

Index Indicates Little Growth Ahead

Washington (UPI) — The composite index of leading indicators — designed to forecast whether the economy is likely to expand or shrink — rose in November after two months of declines, the Commerce Department reported Tuesday.

The rise of 0.4% followed a revised decline of 0.4% in October and 0.1% in September. In August, the index went up 0.6% after strong gains exceeding 2.1% in the previous four months.

Despite the erratic month-to-month reports, the average movement of the index since late summer has been flat — suggesting little or not growth in the economy.

That statistical forecast conforms with the widely shared opinion of government and private economists that the nation's production and job outlook will change only slightly for the next five to six months.

The Labor Department meanwhile reported that layoffs declined 0.1% between October and November while the percentage of new hirings and quitings increased slightly.

The index showed strong improvement last fall when the nation began pulling out of its worst recession in 35 years.

The index measures 12 sectors of the economy. Of the 11 measures for November which were available Tuesday, the Commerce Department said seven increased and four declined.

Hope Given Up For Coal Miners

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The Indian government Tuesday gave up hope of finding survivors among the 372 miners listed as trapped in the flooded Chasnala coal mine and conceded an international pumping operation was only "for taking out dead bodies."

"There cannot be any hope of survival," said Srinivasa Chari, the national coal secretary.

Chari's assessment came as the United States prepared to fly to India two high-capacity pumps and four technicians, while the Soviet Union, France and Poland also offered to send men and equipment to the site of one of the world's worst mining disasters.

Ex-Strongman Gets Life

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Gen. Dimitrios Ioannides, former Greek strongman, was sentenced to life in prison Tuesday for the bloody suppression of a student rebellion against the former government in November 1973. More than 40 persons were shot and killed and more than 2,000 wounded in the action.

Ioannides was one of 20 military defendants convicted on charges ranging from premeditated murder to causing bodily injury in the fighting at the Athens Polytechnic Institute.

Twelve other defendants were acquitted in the 58-day trial, the fourth major trial since the Ioannides-led junta collapsed in the wake of the Cyprus crisis of July 1974.

Ioannides, whose military police played a key role in putting down the student uprising, got life on each of seven counts against him, plus 25 years.

Ex-dictator George Papadopoulos, who had told the five-member court he was entirely responsible for calling out the army, got 25 years. The term was in addition to one from a previous trial on charges of engineering the April 1967 coup which seized power and suspended democracy. In that trial he was sentenced to death, but this was later commuted to life.

Algeria Sets Terrorists Free

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Terrorists who attacked the Vienna headquarters of the world oil cartel last week and surrendered here were freed Tuesday and flown out of the country, authoritative sources reported.

They said the raiders were sent to a friendly Arab country. Unconfirmed reports said their destination could have been neighboring Libya, which has given sanctuary to anti-Israeli hijackers in the past.

Presidents Houari Boumediene of Algeria and Moammar Khadafi of Libya conferred Sunday and Monday on a broad range of bilateral issues.

It was not immediately known if the departing group included one terrorist who was wounded during the Vienna raid, in which six terrorists killed three persons and seized scores of hostages including oil ministers.

Agent's Body In Flag-Draped Casket

WASHINGTON (AP) — The body of Richard Welch, the CIA station chief killed in Greece, was brought home Tuesday for burial in Arlington National Cemetery.

The flag-draped casket was taken to a funeral home, awaiting final funeral plans of the family.

A private memorial service was to be held Wednesday at the headquarters building of the Central Intelligence Agency.

William Colby, director of the CIA, and a group of CIA and State Department officials, were at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington when the plane bearing Welch's body arrived at dawn.

Marine Lt. Patrick T. Welch, 23, standing apart from the group, saluted as a color guard escorted the coffin bearing the body of his father to a hearse. Young Welch had accompanied the body from Athens aboard an Air Force plane.

Welch's widow, described as too sick from shock to travel, stayed behind in Europe.

The slain agent's daughter, Molly, stood next to Colby as the plane landed and broke into tears as the honor guard emerged from the aircraft with the casket. She was given a reassuring hug by her brother.

Also present for the brief ceremony were President Ford's chief counsel, Philip Buchen, and Assistant Secretary of State Arthur Hartman.

Colby ordered the private service for the benefit of CIA employees whose identity might be revealed by their presence at a public service, a CIA spokesman said.

Welch, 46, was shot to death on Dec. 23 by three masked gunmen near his home outside Athens. The Greek government has offered a $160,000 reward for information leading to arrests in the assassination.

The slaying occurred after Counterspy, a Washington publication, and the Athens News had identified Welch as a CIA agent.

In Lincoln, R.I., George P. Welch, 47, brother of the slain agent, criticized the publication of the names of an agent. "For a foreign paper like the Athens News, there's not much you can do," Welch said in an interview. "But for an American publication to put another American in jeopardy is reprehensible."

Also, in Washington, Thomas C. Walker, national commander-in-chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, objected to Welch's burial in Arlington cemetery. Walker said in a statement: "Welch's murder is tragic. Our thoughts are with his family. But, internment in Arlington, as in all national cemeteries, should be for those uniformed servicemen who answered the call of their country in time of need."

UNL Scholars Propose Project To Develop Drought Strategy

"We should be preparing ourselves for a period of drought," declares University of Nebraska-Lincoln Prof. Norman J. Rosenberg.

He and a group of UNL scholars — in political science, business, economics, sociology, engineering, computer science, agriculture, history — are doing just that.

In April, they submitted a 461-page proposal to the National Science Foundation, seeking a $1,383,000 grant for a two-year program to develop a drought strategy for Nebraska.

Word from the foundation might come by mid-January, said project coordinator Rosenberg, an agricultural engineering professor.

"The proposal is predicated on the assumption that recurrent drought is a feature of the Great Plains climate," the document states.

The study aims to discover and develop reactive and preventive strategies that state legislative and executive officials may use to combat drought, Rosenberg said.

The tactics will also deal with techniques farmers and ranchers can use, plus "minimizing social, political, and economic disruptions" as a result of drought, he said.

One of the projects would develop a method for satellite surveillance and early-warning of drought, pinpointing severity and locations, and detecting crop conditions.

Rosenberg called the project "unique," because it addresses readiness "for a disaster situation," because it's interdisciplinary, and because drought is not confined to Nebraska, the Great Plains or elsewhere.

Useful Elsewhere
"What we develop here will still be valid in other regions," he said, "and at least some of the techniques will be useful." For instance, some could be applicable, curiously, "in a flood year."

"We won't have a recipe for every particular situation," he explained. But social tactics — ways to enlist public support and organize public activity — and special systems to minimize or optimize energy use could prevent another Dust Bowl.

During the 1974 Nebraska drought, Rosenberg said, "It struck me then, do we know what to do if we know how severe drought is, and what options are feasible for the farmers?"

Irrigation Plugged
"Our best protection," says Glenn Kreuscher, director of the State Agriculture Department, "is to expand irrigation usage." He cited "marvelous improvements" in methods and technology.

Rosenberg said farmers can plow up crops to combat drought, can reduce plantings, divert water from elsewhere, reorganize irrigation operations, or withhold fertilizer applications to minimize crop stress.

But those are reactions, after no water is running over the dam. "What do you tell the banker," Rosenberg asks, who has loans outstanding on next year's crop? "He ought to be aware" of drought possibilities.

If the project is funded, Rosenberg said the UNL scholars will study the drought history of Nebraska and the region, and its impact before and after human settlement. They will also analyze the specific effects on societal structures.

For example, Kreuscher pointed out that in the past two to three years, some eastern Nebraska dryland areas which traditionally had favorable rainfall "suffered short crops because of drought."

Coincidences Cited
Kreuscher noted the possible coincidence of changing rainfall patterns, or other unknown causes.

Already, Rosenberg said, UNL Prof. Shashi B. Verma, an agricultural meteorologist, is studying "how much water is actually used by the state, how much comes in and goes out." As part of the NSF project, Dr. Verma would develop a routine tool for workable surveillance.

"One problem, even during the drought of 1974, is that no good information" was available on where and what crops were hurting, how growing was diminished, and water vaporizing intensities, Rosenberg said.

Water Vapor Studied
Dr. Blaine L. Blad, also an ag meteorologist, is working on a water vapor measuring technique, using satellite science to determine changes in stress on crops. The Nebraska Air National Guard could also provide routine surveillance.

And Albert Weiss, an ag meteorologist at the UNL

Kreuscher said the UNL ag engineering department "is definitely recognized as one of the leaders in this field."

Rosenberg and his colleagues intend to use that leadership to avert another crop catastrophe because of drought, such as in summer 1974, when actual values lost totalled $1 billion in Nebraska alone.

The first drought since accurate recordings began occurred in 1893, when thousands of Nebraska farms were abandoned and sold for taxes. Increased dry farming techniques were considered a solution then.

Forecasts Inaccurate
But more people fled the Great Plains when the chronic eight-year drought began in 1931. Even today, the report to the National Science Foundation declares, weather predicting is inaccurate beyond one or two weeks — useless to cope with protracted drought.

And no significant efforts at drought-preparedness have been made locally since 1957. Since then, what were widely considered as buffers — irrigation, federal and state banking programs, crop insurance and relief programs and other governmental mechanisms — were thought as sufficient weather protection.

But "The drought of 1974 (and to a lesser degree the dry August of 1971) demonstrated certain weaknesses in our ability to survive drought," the proposal says.

"The citizenry now expects a 'good life' and demands it." Still, because of energy and capital dependence as well as short food reserves, the proposal questions the ability of America to react to stresses in the "highly probable event" of drought.

System Approach
The project would design a system to observe the onset, severity and duration of drought, and another for evaluation. Sub-projects cover a broad range, from political and personal implications to the effects on insects and energy demands.

Sponsors include UNL, the NU Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, the Nebraska Agricultural Experiment Station, and the Conservation and Survey Division.

State government representatives will serve on a panel to coordinate research and to act as agency liaisons. Midway through the project, in fall 1976, an international symposium would be held on drought and the future of the land.

Meanwhile, Ag Director Kreuscher said, Nebraska since 1971 has participated in a hail suppression project, including 700 square miles around Kumball County.

Nebraska has also just entered a five-year, cooperative project with Kansas, Colorado and the U.S. Interior Department to discover ways to induce increased precipitation, Kreuscher said.

Drought Would Have 'Severe Impact' On U.S. And World's Food Supplies

The importance of the approaches lies not in their differences, Rosenberg said, but in that "all three of these say we should be looking out for trouble in this region."

Drought in the Great Plains was severe in the 1890s, moderately severe in the 1910s, extreme in the 1930s and moderate again in 1957.

"If there's any cycle which is predictable at all," Rosenberg said, "it is a 20 to 22-year cycle based on sun spots."

Prof. Hanway agreed the "most severe drought periods" have occurred erratically in 11 and 22-year cycles, but sometimes before the expected year and sometimes after. The conditions, he believes, are related to sun spots — the energy flow patterns and air circulation caused by the sun, the driving force which, simply said, causes weather.

No one has ever proved the sun spot cycle exists, Rosenberg said, but it's the only one "for which you have some sound explanation." Hanway too assigned it a "sound basis," but because of atmospheric patterns. "We haven't reached the stage where we can forecast" drought.

Yet "There hasn't been a time in the past six or eight years when somebody hasn't been forecasting this."

Drought Region
"We're living in a region," Rosenberg said, "which has suffered periodic and very severe droughts, but not in the last 20 years or so." He thus speculates another will begin soon.

The federal government shares serious interest in that kind of talk, Rosenberg said, because "We're down, for example, to maybe 30 days of food supply for the world." In 1974, there was a low point of only two weeks food reserves.

"All the big surpluses of years ago are gone," he said, "so that any climatic change" would have "severe impact, not only on one country, but the world."

Rosenberg explained that the only major food exporters are the U.S., especially in grains, Canada and Australia. But

Farmers Busy
Hanway explained that in this "long, warm, open fall, it's difficult for farmers to stay out of the field," and thus, "we did see quite a lot" of crop residues plowed under.

"We'd like to save the energy (required for non-essential tillage) and the water both," Hanway said, "loosens the soil and exposes stored moisture," which then evaporates easily.

Of Nebraska's 17 million acres, only 8 million are now arable, and 3 million are unirrigated. Despite the "best sub-soil moisture reserves" in 1974, Hanway said the summer drought killed corn crops, leaving only miserly sorghum and soybeans to do well.

Unless 1976 spring rains are favorably distributed, and because there's no moisture carryover coupled with six-inch below-normal rainfall, "We're concerned with the weather between here and next summer," Hanway said.

Snow has a small effect, but a repeat of the 1974 summer would severely reduce dryland crop yields, he said.

Volcanic Ash
Rosenberg also proves how Nebraska and world crops are affected by natural occurrences far beyond local rain clouds. In his 1974 book, "Micro-climate: The Biological Environment," he shows how cooling trends are tripped by major volcanic eruptions.

The rising ash, which reduces solar radiation, takes a year to be distributed evenly in the atmosphere, Rosenberg said, and five years before it's washed out. The number of volcanic eruptions has declined since 1963.

There's also a counter-trend developing, which supports a warmer rather than cooler world climate, he said. Some scholars believe they can predict changes based on man-induced turbidity, making the atmosphere dirtier by air pollution, for instance.

Carbon Dioxide
And in Africa and Southeast Asia, excessive outdoor burning increases carbon dioxide in the air, he said. An increase of about 40, to 340 parts per million can be linked directly with the beginning of the industrial revolution and burning of fossil fuels.

The resulting turbidity "traps thermal radiation," Rosenberg said, and bars its escape. "So carbon dioxide should actually be warming the atmosphere."

Back on earth, Rosenberg said, "Much of agricultural research is aimed at developing water-saving ... techniques, or developing crops less sensitive to moisture stress."

But engineers still "don't know to what extent irrigation will alleviate" drought, he said. And Ag Director Kreuscher said pumping water for longer periods of time has "a tremendous impact on farm costs."

That extends consequently beyond farmers' pocketbooks. What interests him, Rosenberg said, is that "people say we're better prepared" for drought. Yet "We're much further out on the limb" than in past decades, because of the huge expectations and investments tied up in single crops.

Now, the "economic impact of a single drought would be much greater."

January To Be Colder, Snowier Than Usual

Enjoy the mild weather while it lasts — next month may bring a different tune.

In the 30-day outlook for Nebraska issued Tuesday by the National Weather Service, below normal temperatures and above normal precipitation was forecast for January.

Normal highs on Jan. 1 for Nebraska range from the upper 30s in the far west to around 30 in the northeast with normal

lows ranging within two or three degrees of the 10-degree mark.

By the end of January, normal highs in the state warm slightly to around 40 in the far west, but remain around 30 in the northeast. Normal lows range from around 10 to 15 degrees.

Normal snowfall for January in Nebraska varies from four to five inches in the west to around eight inches in the southeast. Scottsbluff with a temperature of 53 degrees was the warmest spot in the state Tuesday, while Burwell's 14 was the coldest. In Lincoln the temperature range for the day was 44-19.

Meanwhile, the NWS issued a winter storm watch for extreme western Nebraska Wednesday afternoon and New Year's Eve. A chance of snow was forecast for the extreme west, moving into central portions Wednesday night and possibly becoming heavy in the extreme west.

Mostly cloudy and colder weather is forecast for New Year's Day with a chance of snow across the state.

The extended outlook, Friday through Sunday, calls for partly cloudy and cold Friday in the state with a chance of snow. Mostly fair and cold is due Saturday and Sunday with lows five to 15 and highs in the 20s.

Drought Region
"We're living in a region," Rosenberg said, "which has suffered periodic and very severe droughts, but not in the last 20 years or so." He thus speculates another will begin soon.

The federal government shares serious interest in that kind of talk, Rosenberg said, because "We're down, for example, to maybe 30 days of food supply for the world." In 1974, there was a low point of only two weeks food reserves.

"All the big surpluses of years ago are gone," he said, "so that any climatic change" would have "severe impact, not only on one country, but the world."

Rosenberg explained that the only major food exporters are the U.S., especially in grains, Canada and Australia. But climatic change would affect not only productivity, but energy use.

Farmers Busy
Hanway explained that in this "long, warm, open fall, it's difficult for farmers to stay out of the field," and thus, "we did see quite a lot" of crop residues plowed under.

"We'd like to save the energy (required for non-essential tillage) and the water both," Hanway said, "loosens the soil and exposes stored moisture," which then evaporates easily.

Of Nebraska's 17 million acres, only 8 million are now arable, and 3 million are unirrigated. Despite the "best sub-soil moisture reserves" in 1974, Hanway said the summer drought killed corn crops, leaving only miserly sorghum and soybeans to do well.

Unless 1978 spring rains are favorably distributed, and because there's no moisture carryover coupled with six-inch below-normal rainfall, "We're concerned with the weather between here and next summer," Hanway said.

Snow has a small effect, but a repeat of the 1974 summer would severely reduce dryland crop yields, he said.

Volcanic Ash
Rosenberg also proves how Nebraska and world crops are affected by natural occurrences far beyond local rain clouds. In his 1974 book, "Micro-climate: The Biological Environment," he shows how cooling trends are tripped by major volcanic eruptions.

The rising ash, which reduces solar radiation, takes a year to be distributed evenly in the atmosphere, Rosenberg said, and five years before it's washed out. The number of volcanic eruptions has declined since 1963.

There's also a counter-trend

developing, which supports a warmer rather than cooler world climate, he said. Some scholars believe they can predict changes based on man-induced turbidity, making the atmosphere dirtier by air pollution, for instance.

Carbon Dioxide
And in Africa and Southeast Asia, excessive outdoor burning increases carbon dioxide in the air, he said. An increase of about 40, to 340 parts per million can be linked directly with the beginning of the industrial revolution and burning of fossil fuels.

The resulting turbidity "traps thermal radiation," Rosenberg said, and bars its escape. "So carbon dioxide should actually be warming the atmosphere."

Back on earth, Rosenberg said, "Much of agricultural research is aimed at developing water-saving . . . techniques, or developing crops less sensitive to moisture stress."

But engineers still "don't know to what extent irrigation will alleviate" drought, he said. And Ag Director Kreuscher said pumping water for longer periods of time has "a tremendous impact on farm costs."

That extends consequently beyond farmers' pocketbooks. What interests him, Rosenberg said, is that "people say we're better prepared" for drought. Yet "We're much further out on the limb" than in past decades, because of the huge expectations and investments tied up in single crops.

Now, the "economic impact of a single drought would be much greater."

January To Be Colder, Snowier Than Usual

Enjoy the mild weather while it lasts — next month may bring a different tune.

In the 30-day outlook for Nebraska issued Tuesday by the National Weather Service, below normal temperatures and above normal precipitation was forecast for January.

Normal highs on Jan. 1 for Nebraska range from the upper 30s in the far west to around 30 in the northeast with normal lows ranging within two or three degrees of the 10-degree mark.

By the end of January, normal highs in the state warm slightly to around 40 in the far west, but remain around 30 in the northeast. Normal lows range from around 10 to 15 degrees.

Normal snowfall for January in Nebraska varies from four to five inches in the west to around eight inches in the southeast. Scottsbluff with a temperature of 53 degrees was the warmest spot in the state Tuesday, while Burwell's 14 was the coldest. In Lincoln the temperature range for the day was 44-19.

Meanwhile, the NWS issued a winter storm watch for extreme western Nebraska Wednesday afternoon and New Year's Eve. A chance of snow was forecast for the extreme west, moving into central portions Wednesday night and possibly becoming heavy in the extreme west.

Mostly cloudy and colder weather is forecast for New Year's Day with a chance of snow across the state.

The extended outlook, Friday through Sunday, calls for partly cloudy and cold Friday in the state with a chance of snow. Mostly fair and cold is due Saturday and Sunday with lows five to 15 and highs in the 20s.

The Artificial Tree

Malcolm, Neb.
I was appalled when I traveled a great distance out of my way to see the traditional Christmas tree in the State Capitol, only to find an artificial tree! My only consolation was that an intelligent person had taped: "Townsperson Rebel Against Utility Pole" to the floor beside the steel tree.
This is an insult to all Nebraskans who prefer natural to man-made (which is probably well over half of the population). The State Capitol should show not only the public opinion but also the heritage of Nebraska.
Our Founding Fathers would certainly not want a steel mess. I don't see how a person could put a few pieces of steel together and call it a Christmas tree. I only hope that J. J. Exon & Company realize the people want a real Christmas tree, not an artificial one.

JOEL KENNEDY

Big Red Knocked Down

Pawnee City, Neb.
The Big Red proved that their luck has run out. They proved this with Oklahoma and again with Arizona. To watch them play, we wonder how they ever made it through the season with so few losses — to win any game had to be pure luck.

They made one big mistake in thinking they were too great to sink so low as to accept an offer from the Fiesta Bowl. Then they put their tails between their legs and accepted the offer.
I wonder if they were punished by someone more powerful than they thought they were and were knocked down from the pedestal that they (the team) and the Nebraska people had them on.

Everyone would have respected them more if they had declined the second offer and stayed home — where I'm sure they wished they were after the game.

Wonder how many Big Red fans remember Ernie Chambers' letter which appeared in Today's Mail recently. It should be reprinted in case they have forgotten already.

Why Can't They Quit?

Blair, Neb.
The national TV comedy of the year has been "Policewoman" which endeavors to picture in a lead role a female of the species trying to make like a policeman, somewhat futilely, in my humble opinion.
Why can't the gals quit while they are ahead? In general, men they simply can't be, nor can they make like policemen — even on TV where they try to do it with mirrors.

LES Rates, PR At Issue

Rising costs require additional revenues for the Lincoln Electric System (LES) — there can be no arguing that fact.
To offset increased wholesale power costs and improve the system's financial position preparatory to the floating of revenue bonds to pay for needed expansion, the City Council Monday unanimously approved LES rate increases which will boost residential bills an average of almost 30%, commercial bills an average of almost 20% and industrial bills an average of almost 26%.

An increase in rates is not so much the question. The debate Monday, said Councilman Bob Jeambey, was not the fact that rates would go up, but "how you raise them and who ends up paying how much."
Implicit in that statement, as we read it, is criticism of LES' public relations and criticism of the rate structure.

LES seems to be in the habit of rushing into the council and asking for important decisions to be made at the earliest possible moment because of forthcoming early deadlines after which action would be meaningless and consequences costly. This tends to pressure the council unnecessarily and it cuts off public debate of the issues at hand — whether they be nuclear generation or another significant rate increase. LES customers have been hit with so many rate increases in recent months that most have lost track of the percentage jumps and when they occurred. But whether they have been 10, 20, or 30 per cent, they are seen in the monthly bill more vividly than any explanation of the reasons behind rate increases.

Expect Much, Pay Little

From time to time promising Nebraska legislators comment wistfully about their desire to remain in the Unicameral and how that desire is blunted by the hard fact that tightwad Nebraskans pay their lawmakers at a small-change level.

Usually such comments come from younger senators with young families, who haven't nearly reached their earning capacity or feathered their retirement nest and who sacrifice earnings to serve. The measly $400 Nebraska's almost-full-time senators make per month is a real hardship on them, and the penny-ante salary doubtless discourages countless others who would otherwise like the opportunity to run for the office and make the Nebraska Legislature a more representative body.

Just this week, first-term Senator Gary Anderson of Axtell noted that he liked the work and could get interested in staying as

Some 200 Lincolniters in the council chambers Monday night requested a delay in the approval of rate increases so that further hearings could be held. The people haven't been given the facts, said one spokesman. But Councilmen Dick Baker, Steve Cook, Max Denney and Bob Sikyta blocked an attempt to delay for two weeks, so action was taken Monday.

It doesn't make much difference, really. There apparently are only two choices: rate hikes with an attempt to fully explain to the public or rate hikes without that attempt. It is a matter of public relations, and one which might come back to haunt those officials closest to the public.

The other question of rate structure is the most important. The residential customer will get hit the hardest; those least able to afford it — the fixed-income elderly and the low-income — will see another chunk eaten out of their monthly disposable income. In an age of fantastic increases in energy costs, some sort of subsidy rate will have to be considered.

A rate review by the LES board and staff is in the works and council members have indicated they will take active interest in the process. Alternative rate schedules may be recommended next June with changes possible at that time.

In the meantime, if LES feels the need next week or the week after to raise the rates another 30%, perhaps the public could be given a detailed explanation as to why and be given the time in which to discuss it with those responsible.

long as the voters permit if the salary were decent. But the $400 monthly salary and no expense allowance is "a tough thing for some of us," he observed.

That the salary discourages those on the upward swing in life from serving in a representative body is only part of it.

Beyond that, it is simply a matter of fairness and of paying just compensation for services rendered — and in that respect we're talking about what is due all the senators, rich or poor, young or old, working or retired.

Nebraskans expect those who run for office to represent them and they set high standards of conduct on the job. But Nebraskans also refuse to pay full value for time and effort expended.

With regard to paying their legislators, folks around this state are like the barfly who always ducks out when it's his turn to buy a round. No better than that.

JAMES R. DICKENSON

WASHINGTON — Melvin R. Laird, a member of President Ford's "Kitchen Cabinet," has suggested that Ford could turn his gloomy political prospects around with his State of the Union message. This at least has the virtue of being the first positive idea voiced publicly by one of the President's political advisers in some time.

To some of Ford's glum troops, however, this suggestion is more a symptom than a cure. The proposal that after 16 months as president, Ford should outline long-term programs in the hope of persuading the voters that he is the best man at the helm is, to them, primarily an admission that his major problem is his failure so far to do so.

Some are so discouraged by his prospects that they are led to the uninspiring conclusion that the Republican presidential nominee will not be the "winner" of the contest between Ford and Ronald Reagan. Rather, it will be the one who loses the least; the one who is painted as least incompetent; the one who gets cut up least by the press in the primaries.

"The problem is the people's perception of the President and the job he is doing," says one adviser. Only the White House staff — and Ford himself — can

MARQUIS CHILDS

WASHINGTON — With the retirement of William O. Douglas and the creation of a vacancy on the Supreme Court, President Ford was deluged with advice on whom to appoint. Choosing John Paul Stevens, a Circuit Court of Appeals judge from Chicago, he seems to me to have followed the wisest possible course.

That is to pick men, or women, with judicial experience. Moving onto the high bench, they have a definite advantage in that they are familiar at first-hand with the judicial process. This is a distinct favor to the Court hard-pressed with a crowded docket.

It was the policy followed by Dwight Eisenhower in his eight years in the presidency and, on the whole, with happy results. One of his appointees, Potter Stewart, is an outstanding judge with a promise of becoming a new focus of a Court, that has been curiously ambivalent.

Ford's success is in marked contrast to the debacle Richard Nixon suffered when two of his nominees were rejected by the Senate. G. Harrold Carswell brought humiliation on the Nixon administration. Characteristically the president reacted with anger and a resolve to punish the Senate for, as he charged, refusing to put a Southerner on the Supreme Court.

Carswell did not lack judicial experience. But he would have brought to the bench, or so it was charged in the confirmation hearings, a prepackaged set of prejudices. This was the Nixon strict constructionist view reflecting a determina-

TOM WICKER

WASHINGTON — More than four years after state troopers recaptured part of the Attica correctional facility in a hail of indiscriminate gun-fire, killing 39 men (including 10 state employees) and wounding 81 others, the state of New York has officially conceded that:

—The state prosecution resulting from the Attica revolt and the recapture of the prison in September, 1971, has been so warped by "imbalance" and "serious errors in judgment" that a special prosecutor is necessary to determine whether indictments should be brought against law-enforcement officers and state officials.

—The possibility of the use of criminal excessive force by individual troopers was "apparent" soon after the retaking of the prison on Sept. 13, 1974. Yet Gov. Nelson Rockefeller praised the work of the state police at that time, and state police officers were themselves placed in charge of gathering evidence for the state's investigation of the matter — a clear conflict of interest and a task in which they proved "extraordinarily deficient," or something.

— "It is evident from testimony under oath that criminal acts of brutality to inmates occurred" as they were being rehouse in cellblocks after the bloody end of their revolt.

All of these findings — and others, some equally serious — were made by former state Supreme Court Justice Bernard S. Meyer. He was appointed by Gov. Hugh Carey to investigate charges against the Attica prosecution by Malcolm Bell, an attorney who quit the prosecution devise programs and make decisions that will cause Ford to be perceived as a strong, effective president, this adviser argues.

January Speech: Asset Or Liability?

MELVIN LAIRD offers first optimistic note . . .

Statesmanship aside, what troubles some of Ford's political advisers is that there is no one on the White House staff who has the political savvy and clout to advise Ford on how to get the maximum political mileage out of his decisions.

Laird was reluctant to blame any individual, although he did suggest that economic adviser William Seidman could have helped prevent Ford's New York City proposals from becoming a political minus. When asked, in effect, if there is anyone on the White House staff who qualifies as a heavyweight political adviser, Laird filibustered the question.

Laird is not given to following the shortest distance from point to point when a more serpentine route is available. But his byzantine answer was unmistakable: No.

Otherwise, he said, someone would have thought to explain in advance that Ford really didn't believe New York City should go into bankruptcy, but that he was just being hard-nosed to make it possible for New York politicians to take the necessary hard steps.

Another Ford adviser thinks part of the problem is that the White House staff was deliberately depoliticized because of the post-Watergate trauma.

The picture Laird and others paint is of Ford lonely and exposed to his political enemies. Some question whether Ford is politically astute enough or able to kick free of his lifelong conservatism to do the politically wise thing. In short, if he is educable.

"I think so," says one. "But I haven't seen any movement yet."

If not, even a good State of the Union speech may not avail him much. And State of the Union speeches are not famous for rallying the populace to noble deeds or outlining broad vistas of public policy.

Lyndon Johnson's last State of the Union speeches were vague promises of social programs tied to pleas for support of the Vietnam war and his worry that growing opposition to it meant the nation was losing its will. In 1970 Richard Nixon promised a clarion call to clean up the environment, but the call turned out to be a diffident bleat.

Laird didn't mean that the 1976 State of the Union should be a one-shot action by Ford, anyway. He meant it should be a symbol, a shorthand, for sustained, effective presidential policies and actions.

Others worry that it may become a symbol of precisely the opposite. That is Ford's biggest political problem right now.

Ford Faces Up To Tough Decisions

tion to alter the outlook of the Court.

Ford was doing his duty and he did it well by the Court. Belittling his excursion to China with two other Asian stops was an easy exercise in ridicule. Again Ford was doing his duty. Backing out of the China visit would have weakened the link with Peking and thrown doubt on the tri-lateral balance with Moscow which is the aim of American policy.

In a time of troubles as grave as the present, the man in the White House, and he happens to be for the first time in history a non-elected president, is blamed for all that goes wrong. It is small wonder, therefore, that Ford has been overtaken in the polls by Ronald Reagan.

Reagan, with no record in national or international affairs whatsoever, can go 'round the country making smooth promises never quite articulated in dollars and cents. He purrs like a pussycat with the skill of an actor so long in front of the cameras. Cut $90 billion out of the domestic spending budget. Yes, but how and where?

In this critical juncture in the affairs of the nation and of his party, Reagan is a spoiler. He can damage and perhaps fatally impair Ford's chances to be elected or for that matter even to be nominated.

That he could be elected president of the United States, short of the Democrats committing hari-kari at their national convention, seems to me impossible.

The theory of his ardent backers is that millions of Americans are just yearning for an opportunity to vote conservative in the person of this former actor. Nothing in any current study of across-the-board voter opinion gives this substance.

In virtually every respect the Ford view is as conservative as that of Reagan with the exception, of course, that he cannot indulge in dreams about cutting the budget $90 billion.

Even the so-called Sunday night massacre, so frequently denounced, can be put down to presidential duty. After all, the President could not have a secretary of state with one view of detente and a secretary of defense with another.

It is on the side of practical politics on the national scene that Ford must be faulted. The unhappy exemplar is his choice of Howard (Bo) Callaway to be his campaign manager. From the start this has been a disaster. He succeeded in pushing Vice President Nelson Rockefeller out of the political picture with the resulting alienation of the moderates.

At the Houston meeting of Southern Republicans, Callaway seems to have outdone himself. With the 40 to 32 Gallup poll on everyone's mind, he played directly into Reagan's hands by launching an attack on the former governor of California. Ford has chosen not to attend the conference, while Reagan was there smiling his Cheshire-cat smile.

As the year ends, Ford had some painful decisions on the oil and situs picketing bills. He is president and he cannot enjoy the Reagan luxury of cloudland generalities.

The Mail Garbage

WASHINGTON — Herewith a modest suggestion to achieve fiscal integrity in that most beleaguered of institutions, the Postal Service: Let the mail be delivered, not every day, but once a week. Twice a week at most.

Before the howls go up, consider at least the merits of the proposal. Once-a-week delivery would reduce by a factor of four, perhaps five, the single biggest item in the post office budget: getting mail from a central delivery point to nearby homes and offices.

It would put the service on a firm financial footing and eliminate the necessity for the public continually to supplement the institution's perpetually overdrawn bank account.

Coincidentally, that would solve the perplexing problem of how to distribute postal service costs equitably among users and non-users.

cost of delivery would at long last pay for itself, and then some.

Then, instead of abandoning special delivery service as the Postal Service has recently proposed, that option could be expanded, with rates that would cover its cost — perhaps double the present 60 cents — for patrons who desire faster than once-a-week delivery service. The point being, those who want more should pay for it.

The expectation of speedy, everyday mail service is a deeply rooted part of American tradition.

But it is an expectation that, from the standpoint of necessity and common sense, is as unwarranted, and even as frivolously indulgent, as overeating.

The concept sprang from a necessary dependence upon the mails in early times as the speediest, most effective means of communicating long distance. That concept today is as antiquated as the pony express, and our efforts to keep it alive have time and again have been failures: As one wag proved, a few years ago, the mail from Philadelphia to the nation's capital can still be delivered faster by horse.

So let's be sensible and give up a fight that isn't worth winning even if we could. Once or twice a week delivery, and let those who want more spend extra.

After all, in this age, most of the stuff that comes into the box or through the slot on the door isn't much more valuable or urgent than that which is picked up by another regular home visitor.

And most of us get by very well on weekly or twice-weekly visits from the garbage collector.

The Final Judgment Remains

GOV. CAREY ... appointed Meyer to investigate charges . . .

team in protest against its one-sidedness. At Meyer's request, Carey and Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz also appointed Alfred Scotti, the former chief assistant district attorney in Manhattan, to act as special prosecutor. He will have authority not only to seek new indictments, but to review those so far obtained and recommend dismissal or executive clemency, and to supervise the work of the established Attica prosecution force.

The appointment of Scotti and the sweeping powers given him are comment enough on the state's conduct so far of the Attica investigation. It has been a disgrace to New York, continuing through the administrations of three governors of two parties (but the same old attorney general) and even in Meyer's devastating report and the state's official reaction to it, there remains a grudging unwillingness finally to call a spade a spade and act accordingly.

Anthony G. Simonetti, the chief Attica prosecutor, was lambasted by Meyer for "mistakes in judgment," poor priorities, "changes and revisions in the direction of his investigation," failure to seek proper prosecutorial resources, and — most astonishing of all — "indifference" to investigating charges of brutality by officers against inmates. Yet, Meyer's report said there had been no "intentional cover-up," which enabled Simonetti to say that he was glad for findings "clearing my good name and reputation." What could give him a bad reputation as a prosecutor if the Meyer report and the appointment of Scotti did it?

Yet, the state in its immemorial bureaucratic fashion — that absolute inability to concede official error or wrongdoing that has brought government as much as anything else into its current dispute — is continuing Simonetti on his job, even though Meyer did say in his report that "clearly the state has dealt unfairly with the inmates and affirmative action is necessary to correct the situation."

Despite the powers given him, moreover, Scotti faces two formidable obstacles in seeking indictments for what Meyer called "the use of criminally excessive force" by troopers and "acts of brutality" to inmates by corrections officers and others. One is the fact that state police, who had ample reason to focus the investigation as closely as possible on inmates rather than on their own actions, investigated themselves — not surprisingly — in such a way that Meyer said they had made "nearly impossible the prosecution of enforcement officials."

The other is the reluctance, cited by Meyer, of the two grand juries presently impaneled in the Attica matter to indict law enforcement and corrections officers. These grand juries sit in rural Wyoming County, where the prison is hidden away; they suffer, in Meyer's view, from "partiality and emotion on the part of jurors in considering charges against enforcement personnel who were their friends or neighbors." Those juries have indicted only one state trooper and no corrections officers, and just this month they refused to indict four other troopers and three prison guards — but so far they have indicted 62 inmates for 1,289 alleged crimes.

There is no reason to believe even so experienced a prosecutor as Scotti can make these grand juries do what they don't want to do, particularly if the state police botched, purposely or otherwise, the gathering of evidence against themselves. But if against such odds, Scotti can get indictments for crimes that almost certainly were committed, the real judgment on the original prosecution will finally have been made.

I was appalled when I traveled a great distance out of my way to see the traditional Christmas tree in the State Capitol, only to find an artificial tree! My only consolation was that an intelligent person had taped: "Townpeople Rebel Against Utility Pole" to the floor beside the steel tree.

This is an insult to all Nebraskans who prefer nature! to man-made (which is probably well over half of the population) The State Capitol should show not only the public opinion but also the heritage of Nebraska.

Our Founding Fathers would certainly not want a steel mess. I don't see how a person could put a few pieces of steel together and call it a Christmas tree. I only hope that J. J. Exon & Company realize the people want a real Christmas tree, not an artificial one.

The Big Red proved that their luck has run out. They proved this with Oklahoma and again with Arizona. To watch them play, we wonder how they ever made it through the season with so few losses — to win any game had to be pure luck.

They made one big mistake in thinking they were too great to sink so low as to accept an offer from the Fiesta Bowl. Then they put their tails between their legs and accepted the offer.

I wonder if they were punished by someone more powerful than they thought they were and were knocked down from the pedestal that they (the team) and the Nebraska people had them on.

Everyone would have respected them more if they had declined the second offer and stayed home — where I'm sure they wished they were after the game.

LES Rates, PR At Issue

Rising costs require additional revenues for the Lincoln Electric System (LES) — there can be no arguing that fact.

To offset increased wholesale power costs and improve the system's financial position preparatory to the floating of revenue bonds to pay for needed expansion, the City Council Monday unanimously approved LES rate increases which will boost residential bills an average of almost 30%, commercial bills an average of almost 20% and industrial bills an average of almost 26%.

An increase in rates is not so much the question. The debate Monday, said Councilman Bob Jeambey, was not the fact that rates would go up, but "how you raise them and who ends up paying how much."

Implicit in that statement, as we read it, is criticism of LES' public relations and criticism of the rate structure.

LES seems to be in the habit of rushing into the council and asking for important decisions to be made at the earliest possible moment because of forthcoming early deadlines after which action would be meaningless and consequences costly. This tends to pressure the council unnecessarily and it cuts off public debate of the issues at hand — whether they be nuclear generation or another significant rate increase. LES customers have been hit with so many rate increases in recent months that most have lost track of the percentage jumps and when they occurred. But whether they have been 10, 20, or 30 per cent, they are seen in the monthly bill more vividly than any explanation of the reasons behind rate increases.

Some 200 Lincolniters in the council chambers Monday night requested a delay in the approval of rate increases so that further hearings could be held. The people haven't been given the facts, said one spokesman. But Councilmen Dick Baker, Steve Cook, Max Denney and Bob Sikyta blocked an attempt to delay for two weeks, so action was taken Monday.

It doesn't make much difference, really. There apparently are only two choices: rate hikes with an attempt to fully explain to the public or rate hikes without that attempt. It is a matter of public relations, and one which might come back to haunt those officials closest to the public.

The other question of rate structure is the most important. The residential customer will get hit the hardest; those least able to afford it — the fixed-income elderly and the low-income — will see another chunk eaten out of their monthly disposable income. In an age of fantastic increases in energy costs, some sort of subsidy rate will have to be considered.

A rate review by the LES board and staff is in the works and council members have indicated they will take active interest in the process. Alternative rate schedules may be recommended next June with changes possible at that time.

In the meantime, if LES feels the need next week or the week after to raise the rates another 30%, perhaps the public could be given a detailed explanation as to why and be given the time in which to discuss it with those responsible.

Expect Much, Pay Little

From time to time promising Nebraska legislators comment wistfully about their desire to remain in the Unicameral and how that desire is blunted by the hard fact that tightwad Nebraskans pay their lawmakers at a small-change level.

Usually such comments come from younger senators with young families, who haven't nearly reached their earning capacity or feathered their retirement nest and who sacrifice earnings to serve. The measly $400 Nebraska's almost-full-time senators make per month is a real hardship on them, and the penny-ante salary doubtless discourages countless others who would otherwise like the opportunity to run for the office and make the Nebraska Legislature a more representative body.

Just this week, first-term Senator Gary Anderson of Axtell noted that he liked the work and could get interested in staying as long as the voters permit if the salary were decent. But the $400 monthly salary and no expense allowance is "a tough thing for some of us," he observed.

That the salary discourages those on the upward swing in life from serving in a representative body is only part of it.

Beyond that, it is simply a matter of fairness and of paying just compensation for services rendered — and in that respect we're talking about what is due all the senators, rich or poor, young or old, working or retired.

Nebraskans expect those who run for office to represent them and they set high standards of conduct on the job. But Nebraskans also refuse to pay full value for time and effort expended.

With regard to paying their legislators, folks around this state are like the barfly who always ducks out when it's his turn to buy a round. No better than that.

JAMES R. DICKENSON

WASHINGTON — Melvin R. Laird, a member of President Ford's "Kitchen Cabinet," has suggested that Ford could turn his gloomy political prospects around with his State of the Union message. This at least has the virtue of being the first positive idea voiced publicly by one of the President's political advisers in some time.

To some of Ford's glum troops, however, this suggestion is more a symptom than a cure. The proposal that after 16 months as president, Ford should outline long-term programs in the hope of persuading the voters that he is the best man at the helm is, to them, primarily an admission that his major problem is his failure so far to do so.

Some are so discouraged by his prospects that they are led to the uninspiring conclusion that the Republican presidential nominee will not be the "winner" of the contest between Ford and Ronald Reagan. Rather, it will be the one who loses the least; the one who is painted as least incompetent; the one who gets cut up least by the press in the primaries.

"The problem is the people's perception of the President and the job he is doing," says one adviser. Only the White House staff — and Ford himself — can

January Speech: Asset Or Liability?

MELVIN LAIRD ... offers first optimistic note ...

devise programs and make decisions that will cause Ford to be perceived as a strong, effective president, this adviser argues.

Statesmanship aside, what troubles some of Ford's political advisers is that there is no one on the White House staff who has the political savvy and clout to advise Ford on how to get the maximum political mileage out of his decisions.

Laird was reluctant to blame any individual, although he did suggest that economic adviser William Seldman could have helped prevent Ford's New York City proposals from becoming a political minus. When asked, in effect, if there is anyone on the White House staff who qualifies as a heavyweight political adviser, Laird filibustered the question.

Laird is not given to following the shortest distance from point to point when a more serpentine route is available. But his byzantine answer was unmistakable: No.

Otherwise, he said, someone would have thought to explain in advance that Ford really didn't believe New York City should go into bankruptcy, but that he was just being hard-nosed to make it possible for New York politicians to take the necessary hard steps.

Another Ford adviser thinks part of the problem is that the White House staff was deliberately depoliticized because of the post-Watergate trauma.

The picture Laird and others paint is of Ford lonely and exposed to his political enemies. Some question whether Ford is politically astute enough or able to kick free of his lifelong conservatism to do the politically wise thing. In short, if he is educable.

"I think so," says one. "But I haven't seen any movement yet."

If not, even a good State of the Union speech may not avail him much. And State of the Union speeches are not famous for rallying the populace to noble deeds or outlining broad vistas of public policy.

Lyndon Johnson's last State of the Union speeches were vague promises of social programs tied to pleas for support of the Vietnam war and his worry that growing opposition to it meant the nation was losing its will. In 1970 Richard Nixon promised a clarion call to clean up the environment, but the call turned out to be a diffident bleat.

Laird didn't mean that the 1976 State of the Union should be a one-shot action by Ford, anyway. He meant it should be a symbol, a shorthand, for sustained, effective presidential policies and actions.

Others worry that it may become a symbol of precisely the opposite. That is Ford's biggest political problem right now.

MARQUIS CHILDS

WASHINGTON — With the retirement of William O. Douglas and the creation of a vacancy on the Supreme Court, President Ford was deluged with advice on whom to appoint. Choosing John Paul Stevens, a Circuit Court of Appeals judge from Chicago, he seems to me to have followed the wisest possible course.

That is to pick men, or women, with judicial experience. Moving onto the high bench, they have a definite advantage in that they are familiar at first-hand with the judicial process. This is a distinct favor to the Court hard-pressed with a crowded docket.

It was the policy followed by Dwight Eisenhower in his eight years in the presidency and, on the whole, with happy results. One of his appointees, Potter Stewart, is an outstanding judge with a promise of becoming a new focus of a Court, that has been curiously affibivalent.

Ford's success is in marked contrast to the debacle Richard Nixon suffered when two of his nominees were rejected by the Senate. G. Harrold Carswell brought humiliation on the Nixon administration. Characteristically the president reacted with anger and a resolve to punish the Senate for, as he charged, refusing to put a Southerner on the Supreme Court.

Carswell did not lack judicial experience. But he would have brought to the bench, or so it was charged in the confirmation hearings, a prepackaged set of prejudices. This was the Nixon strict constructionist view reflecting a determination to alter the outlook of the Court.

Ford was doing his duty and he did it well by the Court. Belittling his excursion to China with two other Asian stops was an easy exercise in ridicule. Again Ford was doing his duty. Backing out of the China visit would have weakened the link with Peking and thrown doubt on the bilateral balance with Moscow which is the aim of American policy.

In a time of troubles as grave as the present, the man in the White House, and he happens to be for the first time in history a non-elected president, is blamed for all that goes wrong. It is small wonder, therefore, that Ford has been overtaken in the polls by Ronald Reagan.

Reagan, with no record in national or international affairs whatsoever, can go 'round the country making smooth promises never quite articulated in dollars and cents. He purrs like a pussycat with the skill of an actor so long in front of the cameras. Cut $80 billion out of the domestic spending budget. Yes, but how and where?

In this critical juncture in the affairs of the nation and of his party, Reagan is a spoiler. He can damage and perhaps fatally impair Ford's chances to be elected or for that matter even to be nominated.

That he could be elected president of the United States, short of the Democrats committing hari-kari at their national convention, seems to me impossible.

The theory of his ardent backers is that millions of Americans are just yearning for an opportunity to vote conservative in the person of this former actor. Nothing in any current study of across-the-board voter opinion gives this substance.

In virtually every respect the Ford view is as conservative as that of Reagan with the exception, of course, that he cannot indulge in dreams about cutting the budget $80 billion.

Even the so-called Sunday night massacre, so frequently denounced, can be put down to presidential duty. After all, the President could not have a secretary of state with one view of detente and a secretary of defense with another.

TOM WICKER

WASHINGTON—More than four years after state troopers recaptured part of the Attica correctional facility in a hail of indiscriminate gun-fire, killing 39 men (including 10 state employees) and wounding 81 others, the state of New York has officially conceded that:

—The state prosecution resulting from the Attica revolt and the recapture of the prison in September, 1971, has been so warped by "imbalance" and "serious errors in judgment" that a special prosecutor is necessary to determine whether indictments should be brought against law-enforcement officers and state officials.

—"It is evident from testimony under oath that criminal acts of brutality to inmates occurred" as they were being rehouse in cellblocks after the bloody end of their revolt.

All of these findings — and others, some equally serious — were made by former state Supreme Court Justice Bernard S. Meyer. He was appointed by Gov. Hugh Carey to investigate charges against the Attica prosecution by Malcolm Bell, an attorney who quit the prosecution

There is no reason to believe even so experienced a prosecutor as Scotti can make these grand juries do what they don't want to do, particularly if the state police botched, purposely or otherwise, the gathering of evidence against themselves. But if against such odds, Scotti can get indictments for crimes that almost certainly were committed, the real judgment on the original prosecution will finally have been made.

Wilson To Lay Off 275

Omaha (AP) — Wilson & Co.'s termination of pork operations at its Omaha plant Wednesday will affect about 275 workers, Robert Wheeler, plant manager, said Tuesday.

That will leave about 425 employees at the plant, Wheeler said. After Wednesday, the plant will continue operating its beef kill, lamb kill and processing of a pre-cooked and ground bacon product called "Bits of Bacon." The bacon will be brought into Omaha from other plants for processing, Wheeler said.

Wheeler said employees laid off Wednesday "will be paid as though they're working until April 3," when Wilson plans to close the Omaha plant entirely.

Wilson decided to close the pork operations now because it is not economical to continue running them due to the low supply and high price of hogs, Wheeler said.

City Manpower Director Dale Moeykins said Tuesday that about 100 Wilson employees laid off during earlier plant cutbacks have found new jobs themselves or with the help of the Wilson Organizational Re-Employment Committee. Moeykins is executive director of the committee.

Three hundred other laid-off employees still are seeking jobs, not counting those who will be laid off Wednesday, Moeykins said.

Wheeler said some office workers will be offered jobs at other Wilson plants. He said he didn't know whether any production workers would be offered Wilson jobs elsewhere.

Ag Dept. Allocates $90 Million To Farm Conservation Project

Washington (UPI) — Bowing to congressional orders, the Agriculture Department Tuesday announced it is allocating another $90 million for 1976 operations under a farm conservation subsidy program.

Earlier, Congress had authorized $175 million for the Agricultural Conservation Program under which the department pays farmers half or more of the cost of approved conservation projects. Administration officials had allocated $85 million for use but had asked for authority to defer use of the remaining $90 million until the 1977 program year.

Funds Go To Scottbluff Vets Home

Scottbluff (AP) — The Nebraska veterans program has been notified that $369,207 in federal funds has been made available for second-phase development of the Scottbluff veterans facility.

According to Everett Phillips of the state program, the money will go for continued renovation. Phillips said Tuesday the money will cover approximately 65% of the projected costs, with the remaining 35% already set aside in state funds.

He said in the first phase, the program consisted of a 20-bed facility functioning primarily as a dormitory. In the second phase, the facility will be expanded to include nursing home care.

Phillips said the final 318-bed facility, will also provide hospital and long-term care.

He said the facility is now about one and one-half years behind its original target date.

Judge Rejects Charge Against Omaha Attorney

Omaha (AP) — Municipal Judge A. Q. Wolf has dismissed a disorderly conduct charge against John J. Lawler, an attorney who was temporarily suspended from practice last week by the State Supreme Court.

The judge dismissed the charge after noting that Lawler and the woman who complained that Lawler publicly harassed her last August have had no further difficulties.

Wolf continued the case for three months, pledging to dismiss the charge if Lawler and the woman had no further unpleasant encounters.

Two In 'Close Calls' At Crossings

Polk — Two Polk residents consider themselves lucky to be around to welcome in the new year this week. Both had recent 'close calls' at rail crossings. Mrs. Lloyd Stromberg's car stalled on a crossing in Central City. She grabbed a quilt she had just received as a Christmas gift from her mother and barely escaped before her car was demolished by a train. Melvin Bender, a Polk farmer, wasn't as fortunate. He was hospitalized in Osceola after the pickup he was driving was in collision with a freight train east of Polk. His injuries were not believed serious. Bender's dog, a passenger in the pickup, was killed.

Sidner Delays His Retirement

Kearney (AP) — Retiring Buffalo County District Court Judge S.S. Sidner has agreed to a State Supreme Court request to remain on the bench until the end of January. He had been scheduled to retire effective Thursday. The man named to replace Sidner, Dwayne Wolf, had asked the Supreme Court to have Sidner remain on the bench for one more month so Wolf could more efficiently wind up his private law practice.

Vandals Pour Molasses Onto Tracks

McCook — An estimated 20 tons of molasses was spilled onto the Burlington Northern railroad tracks near the McCook Equity by vandals recently. Police said someone broke into the molasses mixing room at McCook Equity and broke a plastic pipe going from the storage tank. As a result, the molasses, valued at $2,688, ran out of the tank and onto the tracks.

Tests Show Vat Victim Intoxicated

Omaha (AP) — A 23-year-old Union Pacific Railroad employee who was killed when he fell into a 300-degree chemical vat at the railroad's shops Dec. 22 was intoxicated at the time of the mishap, a railroad spokesman said. Barry Combs, director of public relations for the railroad, quoted Acting Douglas County Coroner James Keenan on the intoxication, based on tests on the body of Patrick L. Higgins. The investigation was conducted by the railroad.

5,500 Winnebagos Register For Indian Land Money

Winnebago (UPI) — The enrollment clerk for the Winnebago Indian tribe said Tuesday there are already about 5,500 who have signed up for their share of a $5.5-million Indian land settlement which arose from treaties signed in the early 1800's for land in six states.

Mrs. Pat Madson of South Sioux City said that included those living both on and off the reservation. She added those enrollments have come from across the nation even though the larger numbers have been from the Midwest.

The deadline for enrolling is March 15, 1976. Mrs. Madson said there would be a 90 days following that deadline during which those who were denied enrollment could appeal their cases. Under the settlement provisions approved by Congress in October 1974, those eligible for the money must be one-fourth Winnebago.

The payment of the money amounts to a settlement for lands taken from the Winnebagos in Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, Illinois, Minnesota and Wisconsin in treaties signed in 1829, 1832 and 1837. There was one previous settlement but it was back in the early 1900's.

Mrs. Madson anticipated distribution, to be done on a straight per capita basis, possibly in June of next year.

Lodge News — The "Sunday Journal and Star" has it.

Under the money distribution plan, those who can trace their ancestry to the Wisconsin Winnebago will get 100% of their per capita share. Those whose ties are with the Nebraska tribe will get 65%.

The remainder of the Nebraska tribe's funds will be used for a burial fund, a loan program and tribal land acquisition.

Mrs. Madson said the Winnebago branch of the tribe technically has no reservation of its own.

The payments will be made on a one time only basis.

Burns Fatal To Woman, 79

Omaha (AP) — Mary Spaulding, 79, of Humboldt, died in an Omaha hospital Monday of burns suffered in a home fire last week.

Police said she had been visiting a daughter, Mrs. Ted Enholm, when the fire broke out in the living room of the house.

Three other persons were injured, but not seriously.

Wilson To Lay Off 275

Omaha (AP) — Wilson & Co.'s termination of pork operations at its Omaha plant Wednesday will affect about 275 workers, Robert Wheeler, plant manager, said Tuesday.

That will leave about 425 employees at the plant, Wheeler said. After Wednesday, the plant will continue operating its beef kill, lamb kill and processing of a pre-cooked and ground bacon product called "Bits of Bacon." The bacon will be brought into Omaha from other plants for processing, Wheeler said.

Wheeler said employees laid off Wednesday "will be paid as though they're working until April 3," when Wilson plans to close the Omaha plant entirely.

Wilson decided to close the pork operations now because it is not economical to continue running them due to the low supply and high price of hogs, Wheeler said.

City Manpower Director Dale Moeykins said Tuesday that about 100 Wilson employees laid off during earlier plant cutbacks have found new jobs themselves or with the help of the Wilson Organizational Re-Employment Committee. Moeykins is executive director of the committee.

Three hundred other laid-off employees still are seeking jobs, not counting those who will be laid off Wednesday, Moeykins said.

Wheeler said some office workers will be offered jobs at other Wilson plants. He said he didn't know whether any production workers would be offered Wilson jobs elsewhere.

Ag Dept. Allocates $90 Million To Farm Conservation Project

Washington (UPI) — Bowing to congressional orders, the Agriculture Department Tuesday announced it is allocating another $90 million for 1976 operations under a farm conservation subsidy program.

Earlier, Congress had authorized $175 million for the Agricultural Conservation Program under which the department pays farmers half or more of the cost of approved conservation projects. Administration officials had allocated $85 million for use but had asked for authority to defer use of the remaining $90 million until the 1977 program year.

Funds Go To Scottbluff Vets Home

Scottsbluff (AP) — The Nebraska veterans program has been notified that $369,207 in federal funds has been made available for second-phase development of the Scottsbluff veterans facility.

According to Everett Phillips of the state program, the money will go for continued renovation.

Phillips said Tuesday the money will cover approximately 65% of the projected costs, with the remaining 35% already set aside in state funds.

He said in the first phase, the program consisted of a 20-bed facility functioning primarily as a dormitory. In the second phase, the facility will be expanded to include nursing home care.

Phillips said the final 318-bed facility, will also provide hospital and long-term care.

He said the facility is now about one and one-half years behind its original target date.

Judge Rejects Charge Against Omaha Attorney

Omaha (AP) — Municipal Judge A. Q. Wolf has dismissed a disorderly conduct charge against John J. Lawler, an attorney who was temporarily suspended from practice last week by the State Supreme Court.

The judge dismissed the charge after noting that Lawler and the woman who complained that Lawler publicly harassed her last August have had no further difficulties.

Wolf continued the case for three months, pledging to dismiss the charge if Lawler and the woman had no further unpleasant encounters.

Two In 'Close Calls' At Crossings

Polk — Two Polk residents consider themselves lucky to be around to welcome in the new year this week. Both had recent "close calls" at rail crossings. Mrs. Lloyd Stromberg's car stalled on a crossing in Central City. She grabbed a quilt she had just received as a Christmas gift from her mother and barely escaped before her car was demolished by a train. Melvin Bender, a Polk farmer, wasn't as fortunate. He was hospitalized in Osceola after the pickup he was driving was in collision with a freight train east of Polk. His injuries were not believed serious. Bender's dog, a passenger in the pickup, was killed.

Sidner Delays His Retirement

Kearney (AP) — Retiring Buffalo County District Court Judge S.S. Sidner has agreed to a State Supreme Court request to remain on the bench until the end of January. He had been scheduled to retire effective Thursday. The man named to replace Sidner, Dewayne Wolf, had asked the Supreme Court to have Sidner remain on the bench for one more month so Wolf could more efficiently wind up his private law practice.

Vandals Pour Molasses Onto Tracks

McCook — An estimated 20 tons of molasses was spilled onto the Burlington Northern railroad tracks near the McCook Equity by vandals recently. Police said someone broke into the molasses mixing room at McCook Equity and broke a plastic pipe going from the storage tank. As a result, the molasses, valued at $2,688, ran out of the tank and onto the tracks.

Tests Show Vat Victim Intoxicated

Omaha (AP) — A 23-year-old Union Pacific Railroad employee who was killed when he fell into a 300-degree chemical vat at the railroad's shops Dec. 22 was intoxicated at the time of the mishap, a railroad spokesman said. Barry Combs, director of public relations for the railroad, quoted Acting Douglas County Coroner James Keenan on the intoxication, based on tests on the body of Patrick L. Higgins. The investigation was conducted by the railroad.

Kansas-Nebraska Given Go Ahead

Cheyenne, Wyo. (AP) — The Kansas-Nebraska Natural Gas Co. of Hastings, Neb., has received permission from the Wyoming Public Service Commission to sell $20 million worth of debentures. Kansas-Nebraska says the funds will pay off short-term bank loans obtained to finance new natural gas exploration and development projects.

Post Office Site Undecided

Omaha (AP) — No site has been selected for the new Omaha downtown post office. Postmaster John P. Munnely said he has had offers for a new location, but none had enough parking. The post office is currently located in the federal courts building downtown.

payments to small farmers. In addition, $1.75 million will be used for technical aid to farmers by the Forest Service and $250,000 for assistance to southeastern turpentine farmers.

Basic state allocations include $4.5 million for Nebraska.

Agriculture Department officials said they also had allocated for use Tuesday a number of other project funds on which Congress had rejected proposals to defer spending. These included appropriations of $50 million for rural water and sewer grants and $22.5 million for construction of rural small watershed projects.

It's Quitting Time Again

By GORDON WINTERS
Star Staff Writer
Looking for a New Year's resolution?
Maybe you're considering Art Kluge's.
He gives up cigarettes. Three times he's made the resolution.
It hasn't been a total success. On the other hand, out of the past ten years he's smoked only five.
Today he can say he hasn't smoked since New Year's Eve, 1974.
On New Year's Day, 1975, "I watched football and I drank beer, but I didn't smoke," he says, an expression of amazement creeping onto his face.
Convenient Yardstick
Quitting on New Year's Eve gives him a yardstick by which to measure his progress.
"That way I can say, 'I haven't smoked yet this year,'" he said. He first quit in 1964, and stayed away from the weed for three years.
After he started again, he quit a second time, once more by making it a New Year's resolution. But he came back to the weed. Then he tried to quit in the middle of the year.

And not only tobacco. He gave up coffee and alcohol. It was a tremendous shock to his system, Kluge remembered. "I felt like I was going to fly apart ... so I had to go back to all three."
How cases like Kluge fit into the statistics is probably understood by few outside the offices of those who compile them.
30 Million Quitters
But the number of people who have quit smoking is 30 million, according to the American Cancer Society.
Kluge's case is not as individualistic as it might sound. The number of ways to kick the habit are as varied as the population.
People go to classes, chew gum, take prescription drugs, get hypnotized, eat candy, take over-the-counter drugs, use variable filtering devices and take deep breaths.
Many Faceted
The "stop smoking" craze has developed on many fronts since it was first kicked into life by the report on the dangers of smoking released in 1964 by the advisory committee to the U.S. surgeon general.

The per capita consumption of cigarettes nationally has had its ups and downs since then. It reached its low in 1970 and since then has been rising, coupled with an increase in the number of women smoking.
In Nebraska cigarette consumption actually stayed below 1964 levels through 1972. But by the end of 1974 it had jumped 9%, according to figures from the State Department of Revenue.
From 1964 through 1974 the population of the state went up 4%, based on U.S. Census estimates.
Bob Metcalf is one Nebraskan who simply stopped smoking.
Metcalf started smoking when he was 16. For 31 years he smoked. Most of those years he smoked two and one-half to three packs a day, although sometimes he took just a few drags before stubbing it out.
'Made Up My Mind'
"I just made up my mind. I quit. It got to the point where it was handling me, instead of me handling it," Metcalf said.
For seven years Metcalf has not smoked. During those years his viewpoint has moved 180 degrees. "Smoking is offensive to me now," he said.
Virginia Swolek is one statistic who needed support to whip her addiction. For 12 years she smoked, eight of those years consuming a pack and a half a day.
"I tried to quit lots of times. I quit for maybe a day," she said.
Clinic Did Job
Then she went to a five-day "stop smoking clinic" put on by the Seventh Day Adventist Church. With that support, she said, "it really wasn't that hard."
"Maybe other people don't need it, but I did," she said of the clinic.
Everybody who wants to give up smoking should have it as easy as Barbara Giles.
She tells her story this way:
"When I got pregnant smoking made me sick, so I quit."

declarer may find it more convenient to count only winners in estimating his prospects.
Thus, in the present case, if South counted only his losers, he would take note of three in spades and (assuming he saw West's cards) five trump tricks as well. This would amount to a 1,400-point setback.
But the fact is that South need not lose eight tricks. As a matter of fact, if he exercises no more than a reasonable degree of care, he can hold his losses to only three tricks and make the contract despite West's formidable array of trumps!
He wins the diamond lead with the ace and starts a campaign to score as many of his low trumps as he can. He returns a diamond to the king and ruffs a diamond, then cashes the A-K of clubs and ruffs another diamond.
South has now won six tricks — two diamonds, two clubs and two diamond ruffs — and still has the J-7-6 of spades and A-Q-10-8 of hearts. West has the seven trumps he started with.
Declarer leads a spade, forcing West to ruff and return a trump to hand South his seventh trick. Declarer plays another spade, forcing West to ruff and lead another trump, handing South his eighth trick.
Finally, when declarer plays his last spade, West ruffs once more and returns a trump to South's A-Q to hand declarer his ninth and tenth tricks. All together, West is endplayed three times in trumps!

Stray Dog And Stray Wife

DEAR ABBY: I can't understand how this happened, but it did, and here are the facts:
My wife and I have been happily married for 27 years. My trouble began a few months ago when our youngest son found a stray dog. The next day I saw an ad in the lost-and-found section of our newspaper describing the dog and offering a reward for his return.
Of course, we contacted the owner who said he'd be right over to pick up the dog.
Well, a knock on the door brought joy to the dog owner, but sorrow to me because my wife, who is almost 50, is now carrying on an affair with the dog owner, who is a 19-year-old boy! She doesn't know that I am on to the whole business.
Rush your advice, please.
GONE WITH THE DOG

DEAR GONE: It's not unusual for a menopause mama to try to recapture a bit of her youth. But it's usually in fantasy — not in fact. Be patient. It will probably pass.
DEAR ABBY: My son died two months ago, leaving a young widow (I'll call her "Mary") and three small children. He was only 34.
Mary said she was so helpless and upset she couldn't function, and she asked if she and the children could move in with me until she got straightened out. My husband and I welcomed her.
Within a month, Mary was dating nearly every night, and I was the babysitter.
On her first date she asked the fellow in, and he stayed until dawn. I heard noises in the living room and when I went to investigate I saw them "making out" (I think that's what you call it) on the davenport.

Abby, I'm not saying Mary shouldn't date, but I'm not ready to see my daughter-in-law making out on my davenport so soon after my son's death.
My husband and I had words about it. He's on Mary's side. He says I can't expect her to stop living. I say, she can go on living, but if she wants to make out so soon after my son's death, she should consider my feelings and not do it in my house.
By the way, my husband was not the father of the son who died; he was his step-father. Could that make a difference?
GRIEVING MOTHER

feelings to behave as she does. Now that she can function, she should have a place of her own.
DEAR ABBY: Will you please settle an argument my husband and I have frequently?
He is quick to accept invitations but slow to return them.
He says if we accept an invitation to a huge cocktail party, we are not obligated to reciprocate. He also insists that if we are entertained by someone from his place of employment who is on a higher level than he is, we aren't expected to return the invitation.
I say, if you accept an invitation, you must reciprocate — no matter what.
Please settle this.

Declarer generally makes a survey of his winners or losers when he starts to play a hand. If he is in a suit contract, he counts his losers; in notrump, he counts his winners.

However, this general approach has its exceptions, especially in suit play where there are ruffs available in one hand or the other. In such cases declarer may find it more convenient to count only winners in estimating his prospects.

Thus, in the present case, if South counted only his losers, he would take note of three in spades and (assuming he saw West's cards) five trump tricks as well. This would amount to a 1,400-point setback.

Commissioners' Raise Doubtful

By NANCY HICKS
Star Staff Writer

A proposal to boost Lancaster County Commissioners' salaries will apparently not get beyond the discussion stage.

Though all three commissioners believe that the current $10,500 annual pay should be increased, neither Robert Colin nor Jan Gauger will support any increases to be proposed by Bruce Hamilton.

"A $12,500 figure would probably be more appropriate,"

maybe even a little low," said Colin, but added that he would not vote for any additional salary raises when city council members and state legislators get such extremely low pay.

City Council members are paid $4,000 annually and state legislators $4,800 a year.

Raises for the council or legislators must be approved by voters. County commissioners can change their own salaries.

"When I ran for office I was told that the position was part time, with a part-time salary. I'm beginning to think that is only half true," said Hamilton during Tuesday's County Board meeting.

Both Hamilton and Colin said they spend at least 30 hours a week on county business and Chairman Gauger devotes more than 40 hours every week to the job and necessary meetings.

The commissioners' $10,500 annual salary, which will raise to $11,000 on Thursday, does not compare with other elected officials, Hamilton pointed out.

County officials' salaries range from $16,700 for treasurer, clerk, register of deeds, superintendent of schools and clerk of the district court posts, to $27,300 for the county attorney.

"I know people will question my motives, but I'm not out for more money for Bruce Hamilton. This is very close to a full-time job with serious and important responsibilities," said Hamilton, arguing that the salary should be commensurate to those responsibilities.

And Colin concurred. "It's not only the work you do, but also the abuse and embarrassment you have to take," said Colin, who has had confrontations in recent months with other elected officials.

Hamilton said he has always been concerned with the low salaries of many elected positions in Nebraska.

"The net effect is that it excludes many people from running for office," he said.

Hamilton said he would propose specific salary increases for commissioners and probably an even higher salary for the board chairman at next Tuesday's board meeting.

But Colin and Mrs. Gauger both indicated after the meeting that they would not even go along with increased pay for the chairman.

Mrs. Gauger who intends to run for a second term this next year, said her reasons for not supporting a pay raise were not based on possible political ramifications of giving herself a raise while she was up for reelection.

The additional staff hired by the board over the past year should eventually cut down on the time commissioners and the chairman spend on the job, she said.

"In order to keep part time, we're going to have to learn to delegate responsibility," she said.

Mrs. Gauger also believes that the commissioners should first work toward getting salaries raised for those elected positions with the very low pay — like the council and state senators.

Rowson Chosen To Run For National PR Position

Joseph P. Rowson of the Lincoln Public Schools has been nominated for election as one of seven vice presidents on the executive board of the National School Public Relations Association (NSPRA).

The organization's purpose and the executive board's major responsibility is to try to improve education through responsible communications with the public.

Rowson, administrative assistant for publications and information, is also the Lincoln Public Schools lobbyist in the Nebraska Legislature. He will face a Bloomington, Minn., school official in February balloting by NSPRA regional members in Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

If elected, Rowson will hold a three-year unpaid term, to set national association policy and serve the north-central NSPRA region.

Rowson is president of the NSPRA Nebraska Chapter.

Other Lincoln school administrators holding top leadership and board positions in their national professional associations include Supt. John Prash; Robert Den Hartog, associate superintendent for business affairs; and Carroll Sawin, assistant superintendent for personnel.

Hey, Good-Lookin'!

Massa is the world's oldest captive gorilla. And he has an appropriately solemn expression on his face as he celebrates his 45th birthday Tuesday in his cage at the Philadelphia Zoo. According to zoo officials, gorillas age at approximately the same rate as humans.

Order To License Nurse Appealed

The State Justice Department has appealed a lower court decision to Nebraska Supreme Court Clerk George Turner.

Ms. Hazel Scott, born in India and educated in Great Britain and the U.S., has a professional nurse's license in New York but was denied a license by the State Board of Nursing.

The board cited "unwillingness to accept direction" and "resentful of authority" as grounds for denial of a nursing license. Ms. Scott countered that her license was denied because of her brown skin, Indian birth and foreign training.

"They (the State Board of Nursing) don't like out-of-state nurses, non-white nurses and nurses with foreign backgrounds," she said. "And talking back is also a no-no. What they want are robots and puppets for nurses."

A spokesman for the board replied that the charges are false. Since 1974, roughly 15 foreign-trained nurses have been licensed in Nebraska, according to Mrs. Margaret Pavelka, board director.

In 1½ years, eight to ten licenses have been denied, suspended or revoked, and Ms.

Scott was the only foreign-born applicant denied, she said.

Ms. Scott admitted she once referred to a supervisor as a "stupidvisor" and an aide as a "wee boss."

Judge Blue's decision centered on the allegations of "unwillingness to accept direction" and "resentful of authority."

Blue said Ms. Scott's conduct does not constitute unprofessional conduct, agreeing with the argument posed on behalf of Ms. Scott by the Nebraska Civil Liberties Union.

Unprofessional conduct generally means that a person is either intellectually or morally incompetent to practice the profession, Blue said.

"The evidence may show that (Ms. Scott) is an employee who cannot follow orders and cannot get along well with her fellow employees, but it fails to show that the conduct of the plaintiff constituted unprofessional conduct," he said.

Mail Volume Heavy On Eve Of Rate Hike

The rush to save three cents was a fast and furious one Tuesday.

Lincolntites turned out in record numbers in an attempt to beat the midnight postal increase that saw first class postage increase from 10 to 13 cents.

"We've had an exceptionally heavy amount of mail, even heavier than the normal end-of-month and end-of-year load," postal supervisor Ken Brown said Tuesday night.

It appeared that "everybody was mailing, not just the usual big mailers (companies and offices)," he added.

Counter sales in the Lincoln post offices were also termed "extremely heavy" by Brown. Supervisor Bill Vanderford agreed, saying that there was a "tremendous rush" at the windows on the new 13-cent stamps as well as the three-cent variety.

First class postage raised to 13 cents for the first time at midnight with 11 cents being charged for each additional ounce. The price of a post card increased from seven to nine cents, parcel post prices increased 10.1%, second class 22.1% and third class 23.9%.

The increases were deemed necessary by national postal officials in order to meet the Feb. 6 payroll of the department which is said to be suffering one of the greatest deficits in years.

Two Killed At Gresham

Gresham (AP) — Two persons were killed in a one-car accident on a gravel road four miles southeast of Gresham when their car apparently went out of control and sideswiped a bridge.

One of the victims was from York and one from rural Waco. One man from York was taken to a Lincoln hospital and is listed in critical condition. The driver, also from York, was treated and released at a York hospital.

The names of the victims were withheld until relatives are notified.

The 1975 Nebraska highway fatality toll stands at 371 compared with 388 on the last day of 1974.

Humane Society Chief's Trial Slated Jan. 27

Humane Society Director Bernard L. Patton pleaded not guilty to assault charges in Municipal Court Tuesday morning and a Jan. 27 trial date was set.

A Humane Society animal shelter employee, Chris Hollers, has charged that Patton hit her during a Dec. 18 argument.

The incident stemmed from a problem Miss Hollers had in picking up her pay check, she alleged.

Jahns Burglarized

Drowning Brings Manslaughter Charges Against Alliance Man

Maser, 23, of Alliance drowned. In addition to manslaughter, Worth and Kathy Powers, 19, of Lincoln, Neb., were charged in warrants with misdemeanor possession of marijuana.

Worth was released on $1,000 bond after appearing before a magistrate Monday.

Two manslaughter counts were charged against Worth, one for failing negligence due to consumption of alcohol, and the other simple negligence.

Budget Proposals Drafted

The following table from the Legislature's Appropriations Committee shows current (1975-76) appropriations from both the state tax supported general fund and from all sources (including federal funds and such cash funds as fees and tuition), and the committee's tentative recommendations for the 1976-77 fiscal year, which begins next July 1.

Commissioners' Raise Doubtful

By NANCY HICKS
Star Staff Writer

A proposal to boost Lancaster County Commissioners' salaries will apparently not get beyond the discussion stage.

Though all three commissioners believe that the current $10,500 annual pay should be increased, neither Robert Colin nor Jan Gauger will support any increases to be proposed by Bruce Hamilton.

"A $12,500 figure would probably be more appropriate,"

maybe even a little low," said Colin, but added that he would not vote for any additional salary raises when city council members and state legislators get such extremely low pay.

City Council members are paid $4,000 annually and state legislators $4,800 a year.

Raises for the council or legislators must be approved by voters. County commissioners can change their own salaries.

"When I ran for office I was told that the position was part time, with a part-time salary. I'm beginning to think that is only half true," said Hamilton during Tuesday's County Board meeting.

Both Hamilton and Colin said they spend at least 30 hours a week on county business and Chairman Gauger devotes more than 40 hours every week to the job and necessary meetings.

The commissioners' $10,500 annual salary, which will raise to $11,000 on Thursday, does not compare with other elected officials, Hamilton pointed out.

County officials' salaries range from $16,700 for treasurer, clerk, register of deeds, superintendent of schools and clerk of the district court posts, to $27,300 for the county attorney.

"I know people will question my motives, but I'm not out for more money for Bruce Hamilton. This is very close to a full-time job with serious and important responsibilities," said Hamilton, arguing that the salary should be commensurate to those responsibilities.

And Colin concurred. "It's not only the work you do, but also the abuse and embarrassment you have to take," said Colin, who has had confrontations in recent months with other elected officials.

Hamilton said he has always been concerned with the low salaries of many elected positions in Nebraska.

"The net effect is that it excludes many people from running for office," he said.

Hamilton said he would propose specific salary increases for commissioners and probably an even higher salary for the board chairman at next Tuesday's board meeting.

But Colin and Mrs. Gauger both indicated after the meeting that they would not even go along with increased pay for the chairman.

Mrs. Gauger who intends to run for a second term this next year, said her reasons for not supporting a pay raise were not based on possible political ramifications of giving herself a raise while she was up for reelection.

The additional staff hired by the board over the past year should eventually cut down on the time commissioners and the chairman spend on the job, she said.

"In order to keep part time, we're going to have to learn to delegate responsibility," she said.

Mrs. Gauger also believes that the commissioners should first work toward getting salaries raised for those elected positions with the very low pay — like the council and state senators.

Rowson Chosen To Run For National PR Position

Joseph P. Rowson of the Lincoln Public Schools has been nominated for election as one of seven vice presidents on the executive board of the National School Public Relations Association (NSPRA).

The organization's purpose and the executive board's major responsibility is to try to improve education through responsible communications with the public.

Rowson, administrative assistant for publications and information, is also the Lincoln Public Schools lobbyist in the Nebraska Legislature. He will face a Bloomington, Minn., school official in February balloting by NSPRA regional members in Nebraska, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa.

If elected, Rowson will hold a three-year unpaid term, to set national association policy and serve the north-central NSPRA region.

Rowson is president of the NSPRA Nebraska Chapter.

Other Lincoln school administrators holding top leadership and board positions in their national professional associations include Supt. John Prash, Robert Den Hartog, associate superintendent for business affairs; and Carroll Sawin, assistant superintendent for personnel.

Councilman Of Bellevue Surrenders

Omaha (AP) — Bellevue city councilman Robert Everett was among five persons arrested by Omaha police in connection with a statewide gambling operation.

Everett, vice president of First National Bank of Bellevue, turned himself in Tuesday.

Court records showed that Everett pleaded guilty in Municipal Court to five gambling complaints. He was fined $41 on four of the complaints and $50 plus court costs on one complaint. Two complaints were dismissed.

Police said more arrests were forthcoming, including one for alleged bookmaking activities from the Nebraska Penal Complex.

Meat Output Down

(Chicago UPI) — Despite record supplies of beef, production of red meats this year will be down to 180.5 pounds per capita, compared with 187.5 pounds in 1974.

Hey, Good-Lookin'!

Massa is the world's oldest captive gorilla. And he has an appropriately solemn expression on his face as he celebrates his 45th birthday Tuesday in his cage at the Philadelphia Zoo. According to zoo officials, gorillas age at approximately the same rate as humans.

Order To License Nurse Appealed

The State Justice Department has appealed a lower court decision ordering the state to license a U.S.-trained nurse from India.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Marilyn Hutchinson Tuesday filed a notice appealing Lancaster

District Judge William Blue's decision to Nebraska Supreme Court Clerk George Turner.

Ms. Hazel Scott, born in India and educated in Great Britain and the U.S., has a professional nurse's license in New York but nearly a year ago was denied a license by the State Board of Nursing.

The board cited "unwillingness to accept direction" and "resentful of authority" as grounds for denial of a nursing license. Ms. Scott countered that her license was denied because of her brown skin, Indian birth and foreign training.

"They (the State Board of Nursing) don't like out-of-state nurses, non-white nurses and nurses with foreign backgrounds," she said. "And talking back is also a no-no. What they want are robots and puppets for nurses."

A spokesman for the board replied that the charges are false. Since 1974, roughly 15 foreign-trained nurses have been licensed in Nebraska, according to Mrs. Margaret Pavelka, board director.

In 1½ years, eight to ten licenses have been denied, suspended or revoked, and Ms.

Scott was the only foreign-born applicant denied, she said.

Ms. Scott admitted she once referred to a supervisor as a "stupidvisor" and an aide as a "wee boss."

Judge Blue's decision centered on the allegations of "unwillingness to accept direction" and "resentful of authority."

Blue said Ms. Scott's conduct does not constitute unprofessional conduct, agreeing with the argument posed on behalf of Ms. Scott by the Nebraska Civil Liberties Union.

Unprofessional conduct generally means that a person is either intellectually or morally incompetent to practice the profession, Blue said.

"The evidence may show that (Ms. Scott) is an employee who cannot follow orders and cannot get along well with her fellow employees, but it fails to show that the conduct of the plaintiff constituted unprofessional conduct," he said.

Two Killed At Gresham

Gresham (AP) — Two persons were killed in a one-car accident on a gravel road four miles southeast of Gresham when their car apparently went out of control and sideswiped a bridge.

One of the victims was from York and one from rural Waco. One man from York was taken to a Lincoln hospital and is listed in critical condition. The driver, also from York, was treated and released at a York hospital.

The names of the victims were withheld until relatives are notified.

Niobrara Basin District's Share Is $1.95 Million

Norfolk (AP) — Alfred Dreyton, president of the Niobrara Basin Irrigation District, was notified Tuesday that President Ford has signed a public works bill which includes $1.95 million for the O'Neill irrigation project in fiscal 1976.

The project calls for construction of a dam and reservoir on the Niobrara River near Norden and is authorized to irrigate 77,000 acres.

Dreyton, also president of the North Central Nebraska Reclamation District, said Nebraska Sens. Carl Curtis and Roman Hruska and Rep. Virginia Smith informed him in a telephone call of the funding.

Total cost of project was last estimated at $141.1 million. Dreyton said earlier estimates may be reviewed because of inflation.

The project originally called for a 10-year construction

Humane Society Chief's Trial Slated Jan. 27

Humane Society Director Bernard L. Patton pleaded not guilty to assault charges in Municipal Court Tuesday morning and a Jan. 27 trial date was set.

A Humane Society animal shelter employee, Chris Hollers, has charged that Patton hit her during a Dec. 18 argument.

Jahns Burglarized

Drowning Brings Manslaughter Charges Against Alliance Man

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) — An 18-year-old Alliance, Neb. man has been charged with second degree manslaughter in the accidental drowning of a man in Rapid City Dec. 26.

The South Dakota Highway Patrol says Douglas Worth was driving a car which flipped over and landed upside down in Rapid Creek, about eight miles west of the city. Passing motorists pulled four passengers from the car, but Michael Lee Maser, 23, of Alliance drowned. In addition to manslaughter, Worth and Kathy Powers, 19, of Lincoln, Neb., were charged in warrants with misdemeanor possession of marijuana.

Worth was released on $1,000 bond after appearing before a magistrate Monday.

Two manslaughter counts were filed against Worth, one charging negligence due to consumption of alcohol, and the other simple negligence.

Budget Proposals Drafted

The following table from the Legislature's Appropriations Committee shows current (1975-76) appropriations from both the state tax supported general fund and from all sources (including federal funds and such cash funds as fees and tuition), and the committee's tentative recommendations for the 1976-77 fiscal year, which begins next July 1.

POSTCARD by Stan Delaplana

Puerto Rico — One of the finest points of beachcombing at the fashionable Dorado Beach in Puerto Rico is that they let you weave your own native hat.

"For the first few days here," said the social director, "the new beachcomber is in a highly nervous state. He feels he should be doing something. But what? His coffee is brought to him beside the sea. There is no train to catch. He can drink it leisurely. By 10 o'clock he begins to gnaw his fingers.

"This is the time he needs restful therapy. So we set him to work weaving coconut palm fronds. He makes himself a delightful hat."

Even the millionaire J. Paul Getty has told the press: "True. I could easily become a beachcomber."

Getty beachcombs on an elaborate estate in Surrey, 40 commute minutes from London. There are no beaches. But Getty has a swimming pool.

"What I like above everything else in life? A long walk along a good beach — and then a swim."

Rich and poor, high and low, most of us dream of the barefoot life. Picking dinner off a coconut tree. Netting breakfast from a blue lagoon.

Strike off the shackles! Yo-ho-ho and sunken treasures!

If you strike off too many shackles, your owner strikes you off the payroll. Hence most people beachcomb on vacation.

During winter this is an expensive hobby. First class hotels in the Caribbean think $100 a day is quite reasonable. If you come in the summer, prices are cut in half.

in San Juan. And you really should wear a coat and tie on the street — in fact, you have to wear them in good restaurants. So many of them are disappointed.

"Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are made for part-time or vacation beachcombing."

I asked: "What else do they do?"

The social director said: "After they have snorkeled and woven a hat, they play golf or go on a tour of the Spanish forts in Old San Juan. At night they can listen to native music played on steel drums or go under the limbo rod."

"It sounds like a strenuous life."

"It is," said the social director. "Myself, I can hardly keep up with them. Would you like to weave a hat?"

"Certainly," I said. If you're going to beachcomb, you've got to work hard at it.

ACTION LINE

Or Write P.O. Box 81689, Lincoln, NE 68501

While looking for an apartment recently, several landlords asked for security deposits that I thought was unreasonably large. Is there any legal limit on the size of a security deposit?

—K. E. S., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Under the Landlord-Tenant Act (LB293) passed by the Unicameral in 1974, a landlord can require a security deposit no greater than one month's rent for the rental unit. If you have a pet, the landlord can require an additional one-fourth month's rent as a deposit.

What's happened to the idea of putting in a drive-in window for people to pay their Lincoln parking tickets at? I think this would be much more convenient. Parking tickets are such a nuisance.

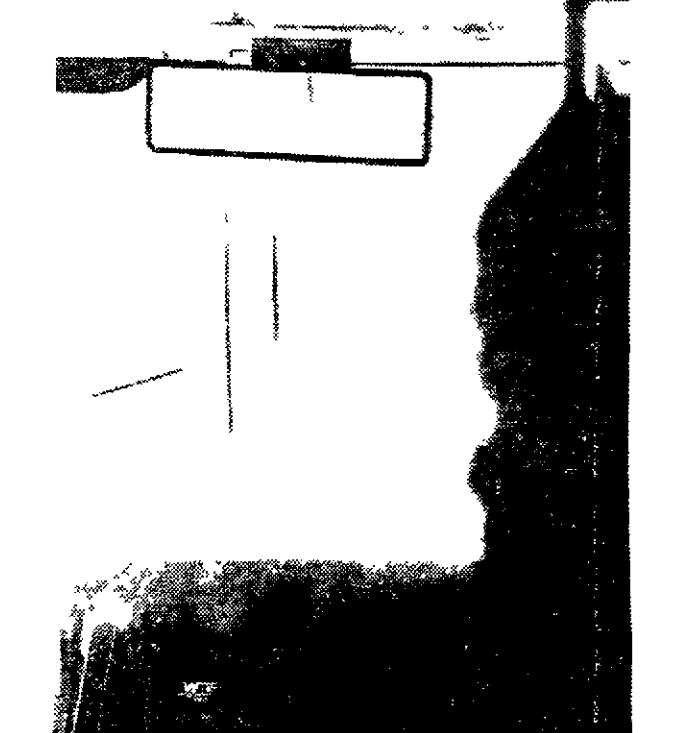

—G. G., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: The City-County Building Commission still is studying the idea of establishing a drive-in facility for Lincolntes to pay parking tickets. It's been brought up from time to time over the past five years. The Municipal Violations Bureau now is located on the second floor of the County-City Building. Parking tickets also can be paid by mail. The commission has decided that the site of a drive-in facility must be near the County-City Building to provide quick access to court records when necessary and that it must be located where it will create minimal automobile traffic restoration. It has studied a similar proposal.

I've been bothered recently by smoking on city buses. What is the Lincoln Transportation System's policy?

—H. H., Lincoln

NO SMOKING OFFENDERS WILL BE PROSECUTED

ACTION LINE: W. E. Franklin, LTS acting manager, says no smoking is allowed on buses. He said this always has been the policy. "No Smoking" signs are posted on some buses. If you have further complaints, you should contact Franklin at the Lincoln Transportation System offices, 710 J St.

I'm planning to buy a new car from a dealer in western Nebraska. Can I pay the sales tax in the county where I purchase the car or must I pay the tax here in Lancaster County where I live?

—D. G., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Swede Staberg, chief of the motor vehicle department of the Lancaster County treasurer's office, says it is possible for you to pay the sales tax in the county where you buy the car. However, if your legal residence is in Lancaster County, the car must be titled and licensed here.

ACTION LINE: Voters can register by going to the election commissioner's office in the County-City Building, 555 So. 10th St., where an oath will be administered. If a person claims Lancaster County as his legal residence the registration is accepted. No proof of age is required and there are no length of residency requirements, according to Election Commissioner Bill Davidson.

ACTION TIP: Do you ever wonder about the difference between Medicaid and Medicare? A new federal government booklet can tell you, for example, that Medicare is for everyone 65 or older but Medicaid is for low-income persons and the blind, the disabled and their families. Since Medicare is a federal program to help pay medical bills it is the same all over the United States. Medicaid is a federal-state program and so it varies from state to state. To apply for Medicaid you go to a local welfare office. To apply for Medicare, go to a Social Security office. Want more information? Send for a free copy of "Medicaid/Medicare" to Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

MINNESOTA GAS, CTU TALKS HELD
Central Telephone & Utilities and Minnesota Gas Co. have begun exploratory talks which could lead to the sale of CTU's natural gas retail distribution operations, it was announced Tuesday.

CTU's Cengage division serves about 128,000 customers in Nebraska and South Dakota.

According to Wilson B. Garnett, executive vice president of CTU, the exploratory talks are being held "to determine whether or not the public interest would be served by such a move."

If the findings are positive in this respect further discussions may result, Garnett said.

Minnesota Gas Co. serves 350,000 customers in 155 communities located primarily in Minnesota.

Market's Decline Sluggish

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market lapsed into a sluggish decline Tuesday amid more of the profit taking that set in during the previous session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks slipped 425 to 852.41 on the heels of a 3 1/2-point loss Monday.

Declining issues outnumbered gainers 800 to 579 among the 1,875 traded on the New York Stock Exchange.

Big Board volume tapered off to 16.04 million shares from 17.07 million Monday.

It appeared Monday's uninspired showing by the market had caused some investors who had been looking for a year-end rally to step back and take another look at the market's prospects.

For that reason, there was little reaction in the market to the government's report at the opening that its index of leading economic indicators had turned upward in November after two straight months of decline.

Another dampening influence was a forecast of another possible rise in oil prices next year from Yamshid Amouzegar, Iran's finance minister.

Amouzegar said the oil-exporting nations would be able to increase their prices beginning about mid-1976, assuming that demand is increased by an improving world economic picture.

Oil issues leaned toward the minus side, with Exxon off 3/4 at 88 3/4, Texaco down 1/4 at 23 3/4, Getty 1/2 lower at 162 3/4, and Standard Oil of Indiana off 1/4 at 42 3/4.

Mobil, however, was unchanged at 46 3/4 and Gulf gained 1/4 to 20 3/4.

The NYSE's composite index of more than 1,500 common stocks gave up 17 to 47 3/4, and Standard & Poor's 500-stock index was off 36 at 89 7/4.

Kaufman & Broad was the day's most active issue, unchanged at 6 1/4. A 318,600-share block of the housing developer's stock changed hands at 6 1/4.

Singer, also active, fell 3/4 to 9 1/4. Late Monday the company said it would withdraw from the business machines market, charging off some $400 million over the next year.

Colonial Penn Group made the active list as well, holding steady at 28 1/4 after a 2 1/4-point drop Monday on criticism of some of the company's health insurance plans for the elderly by Consumers Union.

Nebraska Weather Changeable

If you don't like the weather, wait 30 minutes, it'll change. That's a Nebraska adage as old as the state. Whether or not it's the truth is a matter of individual perception, but one thing for sure, Nebraska does have its share of bad weather.

Why? "Basically, the Rocky Mountains to the west act just like the banks of a river and funnel all of the cold weather from the north right down the Nebraska plains," according to Cliff Kennel, a weather forecaster at the Lincoln station of the National Weather Service.

"Nebraska is also located on just the right latitude that warm weather from the Gulf usually reaches us just in time to collide with the cold north air and create storms," he added. But, he quickly adds, Nebraskans aren't as bad off as the people who live in the Red River Valley of North Dakota and Minnesota. "That cold air goes down the valley just like water in the river," he said.

Every place in this country has its weather oddities, Kennel explained, telling about the man who retired from the flight information service headquarters which share the same building at Lincoln Municipal Airport with the weather service.

"He worked here about 30 years and said the first thing he wanted to do when he retired was to find a place with a nice mild climate," Kennel said.

But even Hawaii can be cold, Kennel added, noting that just about every part of the continental United States can be classified by its extremes. Southern California is extremely dry and has its forest fires and burned-out lawns. The Pacific northwest is extremely wet.

The Gulf Coast is known for high humidity, hurricanes and tidal storms. The New England states suffer from the extreme "Nor'easters" which blow off the ocean. The northern states get the extreme cold air from the north.

"Take your pick, you've got to take the bad with the good," Kennel said.

Weather Service Gives Warning

The weather menu is varied for most of the Northern Hemisphere after September, when the sun takes its perpendicular rays south of the equator.

Unfortunately, nothing on the menu sounds very inviting: freezing rain, freezing drizzle, ice, snow, snow flurries, snow squalls, blowing and drifting snow or just plain drifting snow.

But, until the sun's return in March, there's not much choice, according to the National Weather Service.

In the past 40 years this menu has been responsible for well over 3,000 deaths and has given rise to intensified efforts by the weather service to keep people aware of the conditions that might create storms.

Basically, there are two such methods — the weather watch and the weather warning.

The watch alerts the public that a storm has formed and is approaching the area. People are advised to listen to the electronic media to keep posted on the movement of the storm and begin to take precautionary measures.

The warning means that the storm is imminent and immediate action should be taken to protect life and property. Such action comes in the form of livestock warnings for farmers and ranchers, dress code advisories for city and country dwellers, advice on checking food and fuel supply and a notice to check motor vehicles for proper tune-up and safety equipment.

The weather service advises that extra feed be hauled to livestock and that they be taken to sheltered area, preferably one which blocks the wind but allows freedom of movement to prevent suffocation. Extra water is also a must, officials say, since autopsies performed on a number of cattle killed by winter storms show that the cause of death is most often dehydration, not cold or suffocation.

Lightweight, warm clothing worn in loose layers is recommended for anyone who must face the elements for prolonged periods of time. Outer garments should be tightly woven, water repellent and hooded. The mouth should be covered since breathing cold air harms the lungs. Mittens, snug at the wrists, are better than fingered gloves.

Food and fuel should be checked since hazardous driving during a heavy storm may make the refueling of supplies impossible. Automobiles should have a complete tune-up in case it becomes necessary to use the vehicle during a storm.

If a blizzard traps you in your car, the weather service advises that you avoid exertion and exposure and stay in your vehicle, since it's easy to become lost in blowing and drifting snow and you are most likely to be found in your vehicle. Keep fresh air in the vehicle and run the motor and heater sparingly, and only with the downwind window open for ventilation.

Turn on the dome light at night to aid in being found. Exercise by clapping hands and moving arms and legs vigorously from time to time. Do not permit all occupants of the vehicle to sleep at once.

Heavy snow warnings are issued by the weather service when a fall of four or more inches is expected in a 12-hour period, or a fall of six inches or more is expected in a 24-hour period. These warnings are generally based on the normal snowfall in an area and are issued accordingly.

Snow flurries are defined as snow falling for brief periods of time, snow squalls are intense snowfalls for short times and are comparable to summer rain showers. Blowing and drifting snow comes from loose snow on the ground or snow fall associated with heavy winds. Drifting snow is used in forecasts to indicate that strong winds will blow the snow into significant drifts.

Blizzards, characterized by low temperatures and strong winds bearing large amounts of snow, are warned of when wind velocity approaches 35 miles per hour and temperatures of 20 degrees or less.

Severe blizzard warnings are issued when winds will reach at least 45 miles per hour with a great density of falling or blowing snow and temperatures below 10 degrees.

Travelers' warnings are issued to indicate that falling, blowing or drifting snow, freezing rain or drizzle, sleet or strong winds will make driving difficult. Livestock warnings are issued when animals may be subjected to large accumulations of snow or ice, a rapid temperature drop or strong winds.

Cold wave warnings are issued when a severe change in temperature is expected in a 24-hour period and will cause a drastic change in social, agricultural, commercial and industrial activity.

RECORDING CONDITIONS . . . Lincoln weatherman Kennel makes regular observations from instrument board.

Winter Tornadoes Unusual

Recent weather in Lincoln has been improbable, but not surprising, according to weather forecaster Cliff Kennel.

Take Dec. 13 for instance. At 6 p.m. it was 58 degrees. Before the night was over, Lincolinites had seen a thunderstorm, heavy rain, hail, sleet and snow.

Cold temperatures were moving in from the west while a warm air mass was approaching from the south-southwest at about 60 miles per hour. The chance of thundershowers with a heavy accumulation was imminent early in the evening.

One thing stood out with all of these developing conditions, Kennel said. All of the elements necessary for a tornado were present: the low pressure center was moving eastward at a moderate rate of speed in the direction of significant atmospheric pressure falls; the cold front along the leading edge of the polar air mass was located in an eastward moving pressure trough; and the air ahead of the cold front was warm and moist and was being carried northward by strong southerly winds.

Kennel is an employee of the U.S. Department of Commerce National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Weather Service. He is more commonly known as a weatherman and is, admittedly, something less than a prophet.

"I couldn't have told somebody Saturday night that a tornado was going to hit their house, but that's probably what they would've liked to have known," Kennel said.

The Dec. 13 storm was being driven by winds which intensified around Russell, Kan., and dumped marble-size hail in that area. By the time it was over, Lincoln had a half inch of rain, Grand Island had freezing drizzle and North Platte had snow.

Tornadoes did some damage in southern Gage County, Pawnee and Richardson Counties. "These winter tornadoes are the most devastating," Kennel said, "because people aren't looking for them and don't really ever know how to react."

The cold front had moved just far enough past the Lincoln area that when the "collision" between the cold and the warm air occurred it dropped rain instead of five inches of snow which could have come.

Pictures from a weather satellite taken at about 4:30 Sunday morning showed the front over the eastern two-thirds of Iowa. "It moved with incredible speed," Kennel said.

The weather service is relying more and more on these satellite pictures because "It gives us a bird's eye view of what's happening," Kennel added.

Weather balloons, released at some 80 or 90 locations across the country, twice a day, read the weather from the bottom up, but the satellite reads it from the top down. Combining the two makes the job of forecasting easier, "but still not perfect," he said.

The woman in southeast Lincoln might complain because Kennel can't tell her how warm it is going to be in her backyard when she sticks her nose out the door. However, the weather at the observation station in the General Aviation Building at the Municipal Airport is often "several degrees warmer or colder than downtown."

Recording instruments are located 2½ miles from the building, out along an instrument runway at the airport, Kennel said. The thermometer, for instance, sits out in the open and draws air in off the cold ground, as opposed to thermometers downtown which register the heat of all the concrete buildings and make it seem warmer than it is at the airport.

"An airport isn't necessarily the ideal place for weather observation," Kennel explained. "To one side we have hangars obscuring our view, to the other we have an industrial complex. Then there's the floodlights and the fact that somebody's always cranking up an airplane, so we can't hear thunder if it's right overhead."

Why are so many weather stations located at airports?

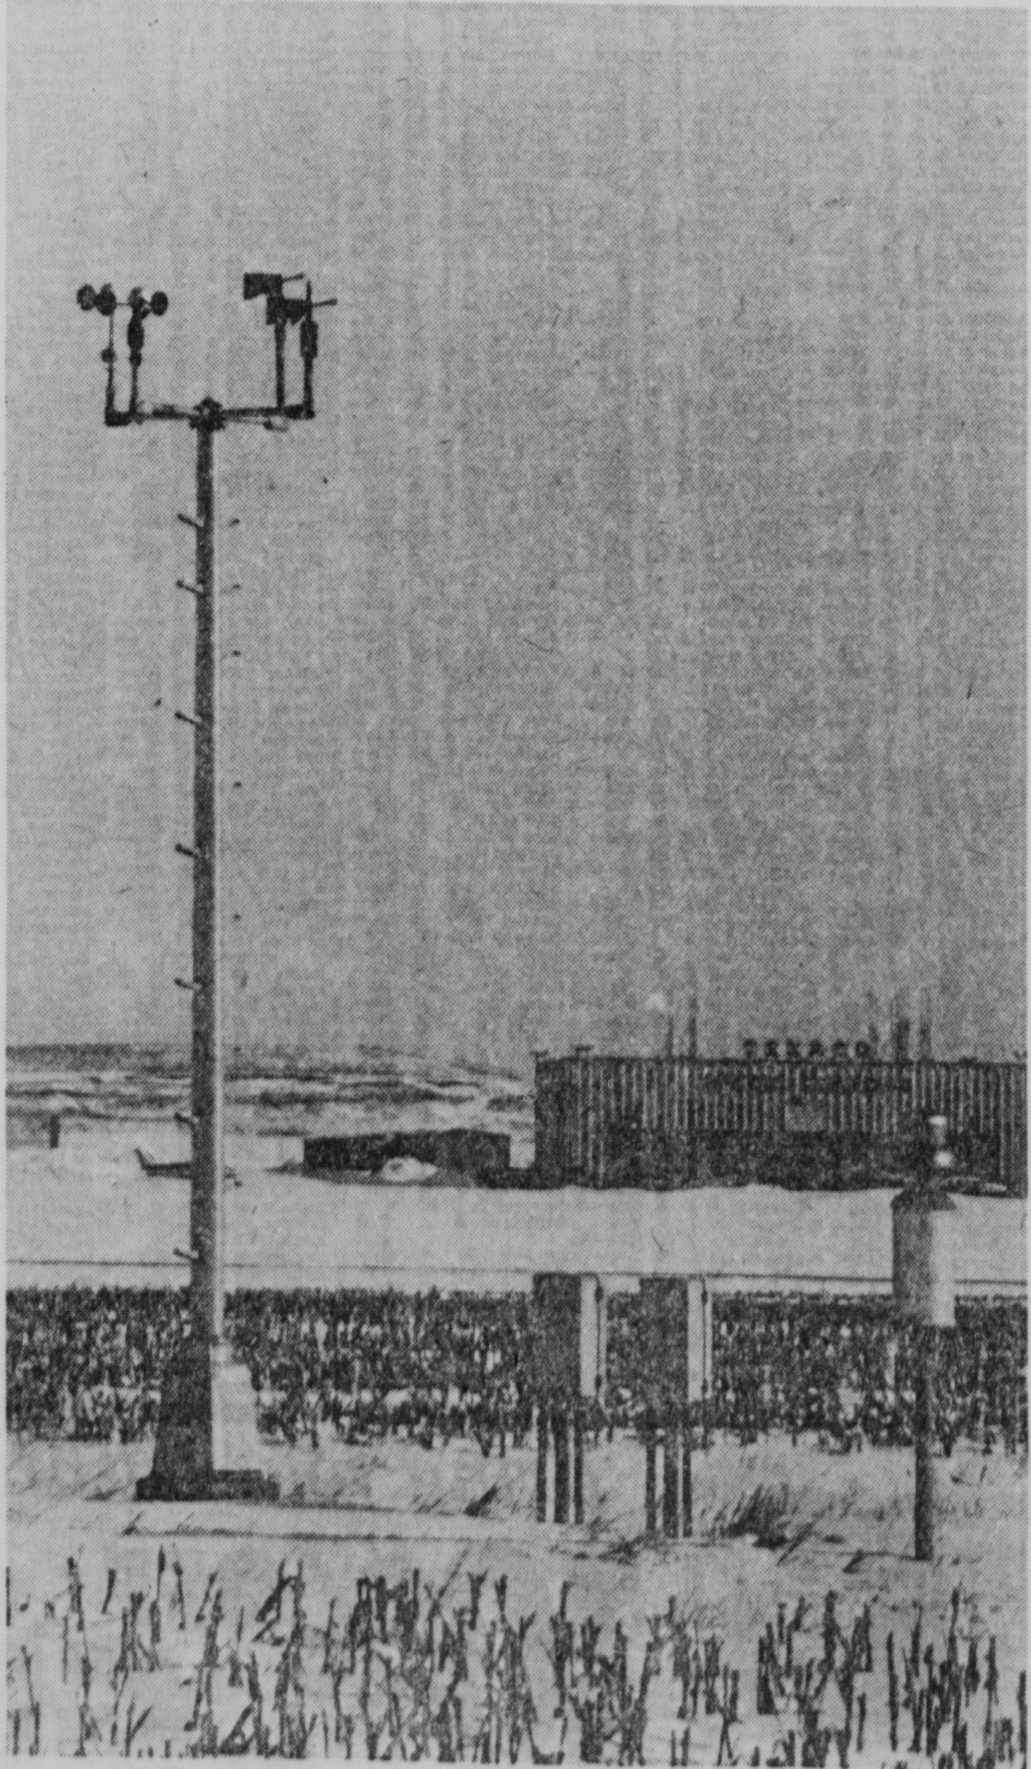

"The trend is getting away from the airport, but most of them were originally located there since the federal government already had a vested interest in the airports, and since the government still controls the weather service it was a natural to locate at airports."

Why is the weather service and forecasting still basically a function of the federal government?

"Who else could afford all of this equipment? The primary service of our department is still to advise pilots of conditions out there on the runway where they are going to land or take off, and to tell them if they're going to face wind or rain or ice when they're airborne."

What about the trend away from airports? "The Omaha weather service is located at the old unused North Omaha airport. Monitoring devices in some of the larger cities are also not located at active airports. In Chicago and Miami some of the instruments are on university campuses."

"It's important to remember," said the nine-year veteran of the weather service, "that we make a lot of predictions. If you hear our weather forecast you can generally be assured that what we're telling you is all we know at that particular time."

Huskers Surprise With 56-49 Win Over Pokes In Tourney

By VIRGIL PARKER

Kansas City — Nebraska won its fifth road game in six tries here Tuesday night to claim the consolation championship (fifth place) in the 30th annual Big Eight Preseason Basketball Tournament in Kemper Arena.

Coach Joe Cipriano's Huskers topped Oklahoma State, 56-49, despite going eight minutes during the second half without a field goal.

"The offense caused the problem, not the defense," Cip observed. "They seemed to be playing tired. They were just standing around. There wasn't any movement. We finally got some motion and got things going again."

Kansas City — Kansas threw a scare into highly favored Missouri here Tuesday night before the Tigers, with a late spurt, claimed the championship of the 30th annual Big Eight Pre-Season Basketball Tournament.

Before a Kemper Arena crowd of 14,958 — which pushed the tourney's four-day total to a record 57,797 — Missouri broke a 57-57 deadlock in the last eight minutes to record a 79-69 triumph.

It was the fourth title for Miz-zou in the last five years. Kansas was the defending champ and also claimed the crown in 1970. Missouri won the three in-tervening seasons. Thus the two clubs have captured the last six preseason tourney titles.

The Tiger triumph helped even up a lopsided Kansas advantage in previous Kansas City meetings. Of nine previous Big Eight tourney matchups, the Jayhawks had captured eight.

Kansas, which squeezed past Nebraska 69-66 in its opening test, overcame an 11-point first-half deficit to challenge the Tigers.

Mizzou, which looked like a world-beater while registering an 86-66 semifinal victory over Kansas State, started out like it was going to make the title tilt a runaway.

Coach Norm Stewart's Colum-bia club was quickly in front 10-4 and pushed the bulge to 11 at 34-23 with six minutes left in the first half.

That's when the Jayhawks made their move.

Eight straight points, six of them by Norm Cook, closed the gap to four at 34-31. When Cook added a pair of free throws with two seconds left before intermis-sion, the Tigers were down to a

The game was tied 10 times in the first half — the last at 27-all — before three Jerry Fort baskets sparked Nebraska to a 37-29 halftime advantage.

A minute into the second half, Fort tallied again — he had 18 points by intermission — but then Nebraska hit its dry spell.

From a 39-31 lead, Oklahoma State rattled off nine straight points to take a 40-39 edge.

Fort, first with two free throws and finally a fielder, pushed the Huskers back on top, 43-40, a lead they never lost.

Oklahoma State closed the gap to one on a steal and easy basket by Alan Rehrig, but Harris countered with an offensive tip.

With seven minutes left to play it was 46-44 after a Fred Stevenson basket for OSU, but the Cowboys never got that close again.

Steve Willis and Fort hit fielders for a 50-44 Nebraska lead and Cipriano ordered the Huskers into a delay game.

Four of Nebraska's final six points came in the last 41 seconds on Cox and Harris cripples after breaking through Oklahoma State's chasing defense.

"Rickey Harris came off the bench to give us great help on the boards," Cipriano noted. "Bob Siegel was also effective rebounding and certainly played one of his better games."

Siegel led all rebounders with nine caroms, while Harris had four during his short-term duty.

Fort paced the scorers with 28 points on 10 of 23 from the field and a perfect eight for eight from the charity stripe.

"Jerry is showing that he's coming back to form," Cipriano said. "He played both ends of the court tonight. He played good defense and was much smoother in his shooting."

OSU coach Guy Strong thought his Cowboys were "aw-fully sluggish in the first half. It was good to see our kids come back and play as well as they did in the second half. We just haven't gotten things together yet. Ronnie Daniel was one for 10 and Olus Holder was three of 11 from the field. Ronnie has to play better for us to win."

Strong had praise for Dave Kragel. "Not only did he get 19 points and rebound well, but he did a super defensive job on Larry Cox, who is one of the best centers in the league."

Third Place

Pretourney favorite Kansas State survived a scare from Colorado in the game to decide third place Tuesday afternoon.

The 'Buffs actually led by one point with two-and-a-half minutes to play, 55-54.

But Dave Logan, who just rejoined the cage squad after playing for the CU football team in the Bluebonnet Bowl, missed a pair of free throws and a short jumper in the closing moments and K-State managed six straight points for a 60-55 victory.

The final five-point spread was the largest of a game that was tied 16 times and saw the lead change hands on 12 occasions.

Coach Jack Hartman picked up his 100th win as a Wildcat mentor, despite the fact that his club played without enthusiasm. K-State figured on being in the title tilt and didn't play like they thought third place was all that big a deal.

Colorado managed to build a four-point edge three different times, one as late as halfway through the second half at 48-44.

Despite missing the big change to be the hero, Logan still led Colorado with 18 points, tying K-State's Chuckie Williams for game scoring honors.

"That Logan is some athlete," Hartman observed. "He has a great sense of timing and balance."

CU coach Sox Walseth was even amazed himself. "Can you imagine him playing football on Saturday, then coming down here with a bad bruise on his thigh and playing like he did?"

Seventh Place

Iowa State extended its school-record losing streak to 10 straight by dropping a 20 point decision to Oklahoma in the losers bracket game for seventh place Tuesday afternoon, 71-51.

The game was never in doubt. Oklahoma owned a 10-point lead midway through the first half and was ahead by 17 at intermis-sion, 43-26.

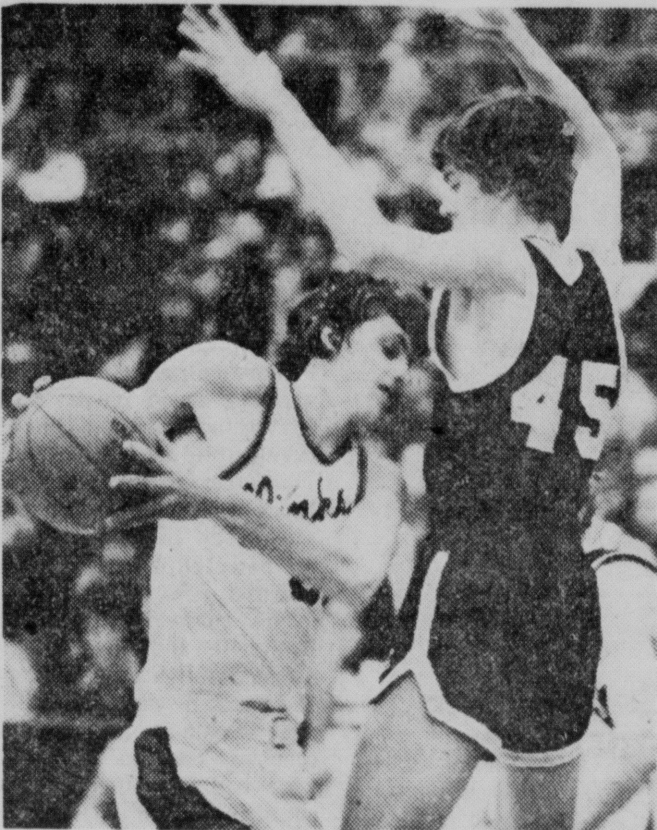

"We're going to run and shoot the ball," ISU coach Ken Trickey said afterward. "If we get beat, we get beat. Our problem is we're playing like zombies. We aren't running our patterns."

Aldie Changes Tune After Links Hit Knights

By RANDY YORK
Prep Sports Editor

After his team's biggest win in three years, Lincoln High basketball coach Aldie Johnson wasn't about to condemn holiday tournaments.

Lincoln High's Jerry Heckman (50) drives past Mike Carroll (45) in the Links' 50-45 win over Southeast in the I-80 Holiday Tournament.

The Links knocked Lincoln Southeast from the unbeaten ranks with a 50-45 triumph before 2,500 at Johnson Gym Tuesday night.

It completed the second phase of holiday tournament irony in Lincoln on the heels of Northeast's conquest of East last weekend.

The two winning coaches, Northeast's Ed Johnson and Lincoln High's Aldie, have been against Christmas tournaments for years and been instrumental in keeping the Capital City ban on such competition.

Despite Northeast's tourney win, Ed remained opposed to holiday tournaments. Aldie is more open-minded now.

"I still have mixed emotions," he said after the youthful Links' fourth victory in six games. "But if the kids like them, then they're good. The kids should be No. 1."

"I'm still opposed to an eight-team setup, which would interfere with the family aspect of Christmas," Aldie added.

"But," he said, "the name of the game is competition and I've always been for that. I wouldn't have my wife if it hadn't been for competition."

The Links reflected their coach's competitiveness in the Eastern I-80 holiday championship.

Southeast scored six points within 18 seconds to reduce a 47-39 Lincoln High lead to only 47-45 with 1:12 remaining and the Links, playing a good share of the second half with two sophomores and two juniors in the lineup, could have buckled right there.

But Charlie Metzger hit a free throw with 30 seconds left and fellow senior Russ Shepard added two more with 12 seconds remaining to put Southeast out of reach of a possible sixth straight victory.

Zone Effective

A combination 1-2-2 zone accomplished Lincoln High's impressive ambush. The 6-3, Metzger, 6-5 junior Jerry Heckman and 6-2½ sophomore Nathan Woods combined to shut down Southeast's 6-7 Dave Griffin.

Griffin, shooting 54 per cent from the field in the Knights' first five games, managed to hit only 4 of 15 field goal attempts.

Five of those were errant "Bill Walton" tipin attempts off high lob feeds.

While the Knights struggled to crack Lincoln High's zone, the Links hit at 48 per cent field goal accuracy. Balance was the key with Heckman and Shepard each netting 12 points and Metzger and sophomore Ralph McWilliams depositing eight apiece.

Support Works

"We haven't got anyone who can go one-on-one against Griffin, so we had to rely on a combination, supporting defense," Johnson noted. "Our kids did a great job with it."

It marked the first time this season Southeast has faced a zone for most of the game. "In many ways we're a seasoned ball club," Southeast coach Wally McNaught said, "but in many ways we're young, too."

"We just didn't attack the zone right and I'm partly to blame," he said, lamenting 31 per cent shooting compared to the Knights' 47 per cent marksmanship entering the contest.

The same two teams will square off a week from Friday night at Pershing Auditorium.

It's up for grabs between Lincoln High's Pat Bowling (22), Sue Bruce (44) and Rachel Hillman (14) and Lincoln Southeast's Jo Ann Griffin (41), Pam Van Neste (31) and Tammy Poe (51).

LHS Girls Take Crown With Win Over Knights

When Lincoln High's man-to-man defense went sour against Papillion in the first round of the I-80 Holiday Tournament Monday, girls coach Joyce Johnson figured the zone might work better in Tuesday's finals against Southeast.

For the first half, the 2-1-2 did the trick, but the Links had to go back to the man-to-man late in the fourth quarter to clinch the title game with a 37-32 triumph over the Knights in a battle of two unbeaten before 1,900 fans.

Lincoln High opened a 19-4 lead seconds into the second quarter when Southeast coach Jerry Harkrader inserted 5-6 junior guard Tammy Poe into the lineup.

Poe Sparked Knights

Poe began by connecting on two straight 15-footers sparking a Southeast surge that made a game of what appeared to be an early runaway.

Shooting all of her field goals from the corner, Poe ripped the net on seven of 10 tries and added two free throws for 16 points.

But a switch to a tight man-to-man with 4:33 left in the game shut down Poe's effectiveness as the Knights could manage just one free throw after the change while trailing, 35-31.

"We possibly could have switched defenses earlier and it would have helped," Johnson said. "But our zone usually works pretty good and we thought we could put enough pressure on her (Poe) outside."

Weren't Playing Well

"Against Papillion, we weren't playing the man-to-man defense very well and they hurt us on the screens, but we prepared ourselves a little better for this," she added.

"I can see by this game tonight that all the teams in the city are improving," Johnson noted. "You see it every time you walk onto the floor."

"East is unbeaten (3-0) and we've got the best record (5-0), but Northeast and Southeast have only lost one game apiece," she said.

Lincoln High's finals scoring was led by 5-10 junior Robin Hruby who contributed 12 of her 14 points in the first half, hitting four of six field goals and four for four from the free throw line.

Inspirational Shot

Deb Van Dusen had eight points for the Links, but her last basket, a 25-foot set shot at the third-quarter buzzer, was inspirational to the team according to Johnson.

Both teams are idle until after the holiday break when Southeast will be host to Grand Island Jan. 6 and Ralston travels to Lincoln High Jan. 8.

Rozelle Rule Removal Won't Hurt NFL Play

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP)

— The National Football League's rule that prohibits open-market bidding for players was struck down Tuesday in a landmark decision by a federal judge who said elimination of the Rozelle Rule would not harm the league's competitive balance or quality of play.

The decision by U.S. District Judge Earl R. Larson said the Rozelle Rule violates antitrust laws and is therefore illegal. He directed the NFL and its 26 teams to cease enforcing the rule but delayed enforcement of his decision pending the expected league appeals.

The decision was a major blow to the NFL, which has argued that the Rozelle Rule prevented wealthy teams from simply buying the quality players needed to win championships. The ruling says, in effect, that players are free to sell their services to the highest bidder and the league has said if that happens more than half its teams could be forced to fold.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, after whom the rule is named, said there would be no decision on an appeal until after league attorneys had reviewed the order.

But Rozelle said the NFL was "disappointed . . . We had hoped that the court would find the antitrust laws to be sufficiently flexible to accommodate the unique and special needs of a professional football league. Such leagues depend on competitive balance and the quality of their teams for fans interest in each season's schedule. We continue to believe that . . . team-equalization rules have served and will continue to serve the interest of fans, players and clubs alike."

Judge Larson disagreed. He said in the ruling, "The quality of play in the NFL will not decrease with the elimination of the Rozelle Rule and consequent freedom of employment. Even assuming the quality of play would decrease, that fact does not justify the rule's anticompetitive nature."

Larson added, "The court finds that the existence of the Rozelle Rule and other restrictive devices on players have not had any material effect on competitive balance . . . Assuming that they have fostered competitive balance, other legal means are available to pursue this goal." As examples, he cited multiyear contracts and special incentives as ways to keep a player tied to one club.

A player becomes a free agent, able to deal with other clubs, after playing one year beyond his contract. However, the team he signs with must compensate his old team with players or draft choices. If the two teams can't agree on compensation, Rozelle sets the terms.

The players contend this restricts their freedom of movement. They say a team will be wary of signing a free agent without knowing who will be taken as compensation, and Larson directly supported those arguments.

The impact of the ruling was not expected to be felt immediately in the day-to-day operations of the NFL, since an appeal was virtually certain. It could be years before the case reaches the U.S. Supreme Court, where it is likely headed.

The league claimed it could not operate with a free market system. Some officials said the NFL would perish without the Rozelle Rule and other restrictions; others said the league's 26 clubs would shrink to 12 or less.

Larson disagreed. And he said the Rozelle Rule restricts players' freedom of movement, decreases their bargaining power and keeps their salaries lower than if competitive bidding were allowed to prevail.

The judge said the rule was "unreasonable in that it is unlimited in duration. It is a perpetual restriction on a player, following him throughout his career. He is at no time truly free to negotiate for his services with any NFL club."

The ruling itself was narrow in scope, involving only 15 present and former NFL players and focusing on the Rozelle Rule. Still, the suit was viewed as the primary test case to determine the legality of the Rozelle Rule and other restrictions on player movement.

Larson was critical of other "anticompetitive" NFL policies, all part of the league's reserve system. Those practices, such as the college draft and standard player contract, are being contested in a federal court suit brought by Joe Kapp in San Francisco. The Kapp case, in which a federal judge initially ruled the Rozelle Rule to be illegal, is expected to go to trial early next year.

"The (Rozelle) rule is unreasonable when viewed in conjunction with the other anticompetitive practices of defendants: the draft, the standard player contract; the option; the tampering rule," Larson said. Thus, although not ruling on them, the judge had critical comments about other NFL policies:

—The college draft, in which a college player must negotiate only with the team choosing him: "If the player does not desire to deal with the . . . club which selected him, or if he is unwilling to accept the terms offered by it, he is effectively boycotted or blacklisted."

—Option clause, which requires a player to play one year beyond his contract to become a free agent: "The option clause acts to discourage players from playing out the option and becoming free agents. During this option year, the player who has not signed a new contract faces possible informal discipline by disapproving coaches and owners."

Tampering, in which a club is forbidden to negotiate with other players unless they are free agents: "This prohibition runs to May 1 (of the option year), despite the fact that the club's regular season ends in the previous December . . . The player has thus an unnecessarily small amount of time in which to bargain."

The Rozelle Rule was adopted by club owners in 1963 as part of the NFL constitution and by-laws. It has been invoked five times by Rozelle. The NFL said that of the 176 players who had played out their option years since 1963, 79 did not return to the NFL, 37 agreed with another team and 60 agreed to contract terms with their original club.

Rozelle last attempted to use the rule last summer in a case involving Cullen Bryant, but backed down when the Los Angeles running back filed a lawsuit.

Kentucky Nips Irish, 79-77

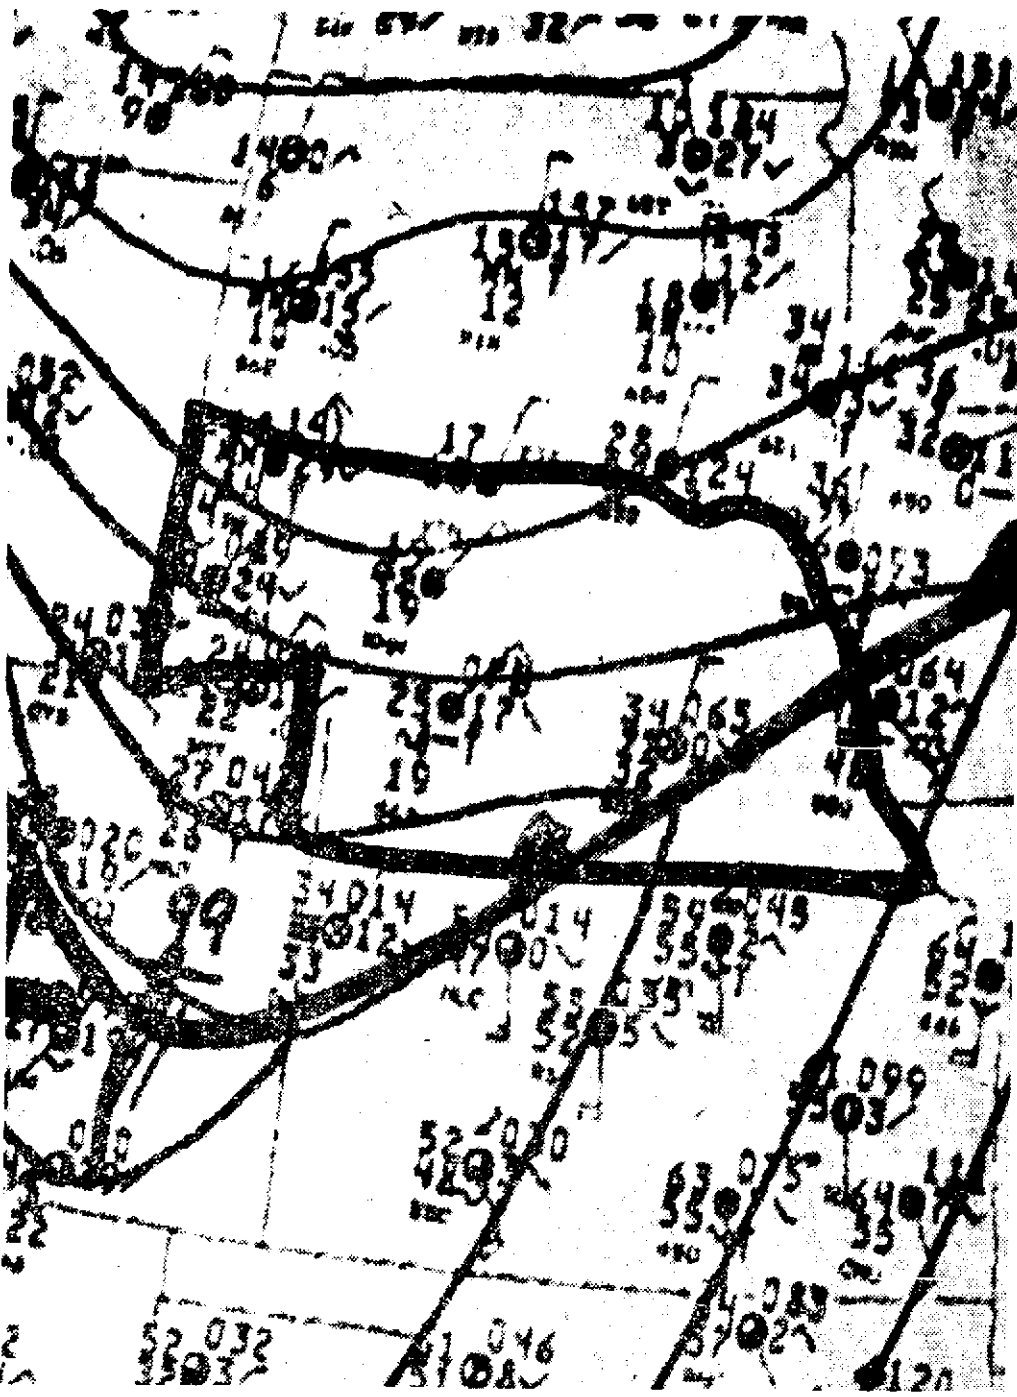

Louisville, Ky. (AP) — Rick Robey's tip-in after a missed free throw with two minutes left gave Kentucky all the margin it needed to upset fifth-ranked Notre Dame 79-77 in a wild college basketball game Tuesday night.

Robey grabbed Larry Johnson's missed free throw and put it back in for a 79-75 Kentucky lead. Notre Dame moved within 79-77 with 35 seconds left when Adrian Dantley, the game's high scorer with 28 points, muscled in a layup.

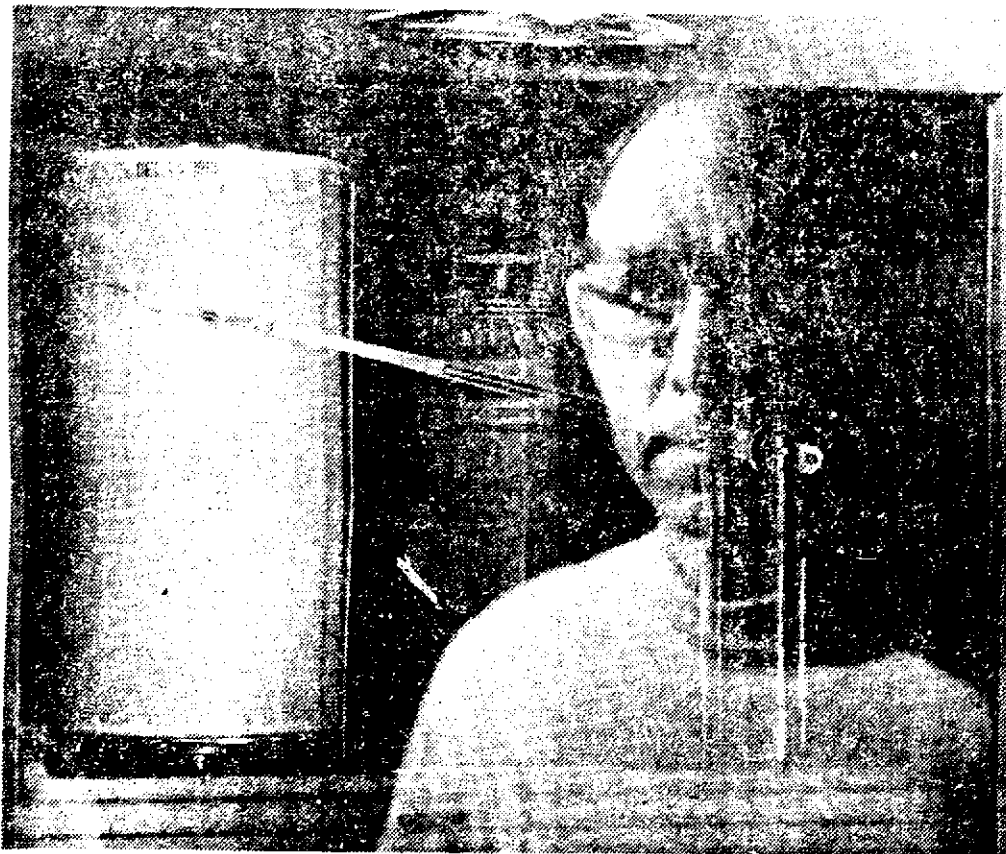

But Notre Dame's last scoring opportunity, Dantley's 35-footer with three seconds left, was off the mark.

KENNEL . . . reflected in glass barograph case.

Winter Tornadoes Unusual

Recent weather in Lincoln has been improbable, but not surprising, according to weather forecaster Cliff Kennel.

Take Dec. 13 for instance. At 6 p.m. it was 58 degrees. Before the night was over, Lincolinites had seen a thunderstorm, heavy rain, hail, sleet and snow.

Cold temperatures were moving in from the west while a warm air mass was approaching from the south-southwest at about 60 miles per hour. The chance of thundershowers with a heavy accumulation was imminent early in the evening.

One thing stood out with all of these developing conditions, Kennel said. All of the elements necessary for a tornado were present: the low pressure center was moving eastward at a moderate rate of speed in the direction of significant atmospheric pressure falls; the cold front along the leading edge of the polar air mass was located in an eastward moving pressure trough; and the air ahead of the cold front was warm and moist and was being carried northward by strong southerly winds.

Kennel is an employee of the U.S. Department of Commerce National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Weather Service. He is more commonly known as a weatherman and is, admittedly, something less than a prophet.

"I couldn't have told somebody Saturday night that a tornado was going to hit their house, but that's probably what they would've liked to have known," Kennel said.

The Dec. 13 storm was being driven by winds which intensified around Russell, Kan., and dumped marble-size hail in that area. By the time it was over, Lincoln had a half inch of rain, Grand Island had freezing drizzle and North Platte had snow.

Tornadoes did some damage in southern Gage County, Pawnee and Richardson Counties. "These winter tornadoes are the most devastating," Kennel said, "because people aren't looking for them and don't really ever know how to react."

The cold front had moved just far enough past the Lincoln area that when the "collision" between the cold and the warm air occurred it dropped rain instead of five inches of snow which could have come.

Pictures from a weather satellite taken at about 4:30 Sunday morning showed the front over the eastern two-thirds of Iowa. "It moved with incredible speed," Kennel said.

The weather service is relying more and more on these satellite pictures because "It gives us a bird's eye view of what's happening," Kennel added.

Weather balloons, released at some 80 or 90 locations across the country, twice a day, read the weather from the bottom up, but the satellite reads it from the top down. Combining the two makes the job of forecasting easier, "but still not perfect," he said.

The woman in southeast Lincoln might complain because Kennel can't tell her how warm it is going to be in her backyard when she sticks her nose out the door. However, the weather at the observation station in the General Aviation Building at the Municipal Airport is often "several degrees warmer or colder than downtown."

Recording instruments are located 2½ miles from the building, out along an instrument runway at the airport, Kennel said. The thermometer, for instance, sits out in the open and draws air in off the cold ground, as opposed to thermometers downtown which register the heat of all the concrete buildings and make it seem warmer than it is at the airport.

"An airport isn't necessarily the ideal place for weather observation," Kennel explained. "To one side we have hangars obscuring our view, to the other we have an industrial complex. Then there's the floodlights and the fact that somebody's always cranking up an airplane, so we can't hear thunder if it's right overhead."

Why are so many weather stations located at airports?

"The trend is getting away from the airport, but most of them were originally located there since the federal government already had a vested interest in the airports, and since the government still controls the weather service it was a natural to locate at airports."

Why is the weather service and forecasting still basically a function of the federal government?

"Who else could afford all of this equipment? The primary service of our department is still to advise pilots of conditions out there on the runway where they are going to land or take off, and to tell them if they're going to face wind or rain or ice when they're airborne."

What about the trend away from airports?

"The Omaha weather service is located at the old unused North Omaha airport. Monitoring devices in some of the larger cities are also not located at active airports. In Chicago and Miami some of the instruments are on university campuses."

"It's important to remember," said the nine-year veteran of the weather service, "that we make a lot of predictions. If you hear our weather forecast you can generally be assured that what we're telling you is all we know at that particular time."

Nebraska Weather Changeable

If you don't like the weather, wait 30 minutes. It'll change.

That's a Nebraska adage as old as the state. Whether or not it's the truth is a matter of individual perception, but one thing for sure, Nebraska does have its share of bad weather.

Why? "Basically, the Rocky Mountains to the west act just like the banks of a river and funnel all of the cold weather from the north right down the Nebraska plains," according to Cliff Kennel, a weather forecaster at the Lincoln station of the National Weather Service.

"Nebraska is also located on just the right latitude that warm weather from the Gulf usually reaches us just in time to collide with the cold north air and create storms," he added.

But, he quickly adds, Nebraskans aren't as bad off as the people who live in the Red River Valley of North Dakota and Minnesota. "That cold air goes down the valley just like water in the river," he said.

Every place in this country has its weather oddities, Kennel explained, telling about the man who retired from the flight information service headquarters which share the same building at Lincoln Municipal Airport with the weather service.

"He worked here about 30 years and said the first thing he wanted to do when he retired was to find a place with a nice mild climate," Kennel said.

But even Hawaii can be cold, Kennel added, noting that just about every part of the continental United States can be classified by its extremes. Southern California is extremely dry and has its forest fires and burned-out lawns. The Pacific northwest is extremely wet.

The Gulf Coast is known for high humidity, hurricanes and tidal storms. The New England states suffer from the extreme "Nor'easters" which blow off the ocean. The northern states get the extreme cold air from the north.

"Take your pick, you've got to take the bad with the good," Kennel said.

Weather Service Gives Warning

The weather menu is varied for most of the Northern Hemisphere after September, when the sun takes its perpendicular rays south of the equator.

Unfortunately, nothing on the menu sounds very inviting: freezing rain, freezing drizzle, ice, snow, snow flurries, snow squalls, blowing and drifting snow or just plain drifting snow.

But, until the sun's return in March, there's not much choice, according to the National Weather Service.

In the past 40 years this menu has been responsible for well over 3,000 deaths and has given rise to intensified efforts by the weather service to keep people aware of the conditions that might create storms.

Basically, there are two such methods — the weather watch and the weather warning.

The watch alerts the public that a storm has formed and is approaching the area. People are advised to listen to the electronic media to keep posted on the movement of the storm and begin to take precautionary measures.

The warning means that the storm is imminent and immediate action should be taken to protect life and property. Such action comes in the form of livestock warnings for farmers and ranchers, dress code advisories for city and country dwellers, advice on checking food and fuel supply and a notice to check motor vehicles for proper tune-up and safety equipment.

The weather service advises that extra feed be hauled to livestock and that they be taken to sheltered area, preferably one which blocks the wind but allows freedom of movement to prevent suffocation. Extra water is also a must, officials say, since autopsies performed on a number of cattle killed by winter storms show that the cause of death is most often dehydration, not cold or suffocation.

Lightweight, warm clothing worn in loose layers is recommended for anyone who must face the elements for prolonged periods of time. Outer garments should be tightly woven, water repellent and hooded. The mouth should be covered since breathing cold air harms the lungs. Mittens, snug at the wrists, are better than fingered gloves.

Food and fuel should be checked since hazardous driving during a heavy storm may make the refueling of supplies impossible. Automobiles should have a complete tune-up in case it becomes necessary to use the vehicle during a storm.

If a blizzard traps you in your car, the weather service advises that you avoid exertion and exposure and stay in your vehicle. Since it's easy to become lost in blowing and drifting snow and you are most likely to be found in your vehicle. Keep fresh air in the vehicle and run the motor and heater sparingly, and only with the downwind window open for ventilation.

Turn on the dome light at night to aid in being found. Exercise by clapping hands and moving arms and legs vigorously from time to time. Do not permit all occupants of the vehicle to sleep at once.

Heavy snow warnings are issued by the weather service when a fall of four or more inches is expected in a 12-hour period, or a fall of six inches or more is expected in a 24-hour period. These warnings are generally based on the normal snowfall in an area and are issued accordingly.

Snow flurries are defined as snow falling for brief periods of time, snow squalls are intense snowfalls for short times and are comparable to summer rain showers. Blowing and drifting snow comes from loose snow on the ground or snow fall associated with heavy winds. Drifting snow is used in forecasts to indicate that strong winds will blow the snow into significant drifts.

Blizzards, characterized by low temperatures and strong winds bearing large amounts of snow, are warned of when wind velocity approaches 35 miles per hour and temperatures of 20 degrees or less.

Severe blizzard warnings are issued when winds will reach at least 45 miles per hour with a great density of falling or blowing snow and temperatures below 10 degrees.

Travelers' warnings are issued to indicate that falling, blowing or drifting snow, freezing rain or drizzle, sleet or strong winds will make driving difficult. Livestock warnings are issued when animals may be subjected to large accumulations of snow or ice, a rapid temperature drop or strong winds.

Cold wave warnings are issued when a severe change in temperature is expected in a 24-hour period and will cause a drastic change in social, agricultural, commercial and industrial activity.

'Bama Strayers Prepared For Sugar Bowl

By The Associated Press
Alabama, following the motto of the team that strays together—stays together, prepared for Wednesday night's Sugar Bowl date with Penn State with excellent practices on the field and an impromptu late team meeting in New Orleans.

Nearly two platoons of the Crimson Tide—reportedly 23 players—went an extra period in Fat City, missing an 11 p.m. curfew Sunday night. Most of the tardy players were starters, including quarterback Richard Todd.

Alabama Coach Bear Bryant, noted for his severe disciplinary tactics over the years, did not suspend any of the 23 players.

Bryant said his once-beaten Alabama team had buckled down to its on-the-field task as well as any team he has ever coached. "It's the best preparation we've had in 25 years," said Bryant. "Their attention to practice has been exceptional."

"That means they're disciplined part of the day, not all the time," Bryant said.

The curfew violations threw some of the spotlight off Bryant who has been criticized in some quarters for hand-picking Penn State, 9-2, as his opponent, rather than playing against Nebraska, Alabama, 10-1, has not won a bowl game in its last eight tries, and hopes to break the spell, against the Nittany Lions in the 42nd Sugar Bowl.

Also set for Wednesday is the Peach Bowl, which matches West Virginia, 8-3, and North Carolina State, 7-3-1.

Bryant, who suspended star quarterback Joe Namath in a celebrated incident before the Sugar Bowl game in 1964, took softer measures this time, indicating perhaps a philosophic mellowing with the times or a pragmatic view that you can't end an eight-game bowl non-winning streak without 23 of your best players.

The fiery coach verbally blasted his players at a team meeting, then "I had Charlie Thornton (Alabama's sports information director) call the boys' hometown newspapers," Bryant said, "so their friends and moms and daddies can read what they did."

"Let them explain that around the barber shop when they get home," Bryant said.

Bryant said some of the players missed curfew by 15 minutes, others by more than an hour. "It makes no difference," he said. "This team isn't disciplined. But how many teams are disciplined now? Not many."

"There are only a few football teams that are disciplined," Bryant said. "Arizona State is one. The Miami Dolphins are one. I don't know what it is—the parents, the coaches or what. Maybe it's our coaching that's wrong. But they aren't disciplined."

Talk circulating from Atlanta, site of the Peach Bowl, centers on the weather and whether North Carolina State Coach Lou Holtz is headed for the pros.

Holtz said he had been contacted by the New Orleans Saints of the National Football League, adding "New Orleans is a good opportunity for someone, but I am happy at North Carolina State."

Holtz would be a lot happier if his star running back Ted Brown were certain to play.

Brown, a 5-foot-8, 180-pound freshman who is recovering from a hip injury, rushed 142 times for 913 yards and 13 touchdowns this season.

"Right now, we are making preparations to go without using him in the game at all," Holtz said.

Holtz would also be happier if the sun began shining. Workouts have been hampered by the rain, which has also plagued this bowl game for the past seven years.

The last time these two teams met, North Carolina State bombarded West Virginia 49-13 in the 1972 Peach Bowl.

Wednesday's action is merely an appetizer for the college football gourmet, whose appetite should be whetted by the following New Year's Day fare:

In the Cotton Bowl at Dallas, Arkansas, 9-2, meets Georgia, 9-2, in a battle of berserk running offenses; in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif., No. 1 ranked Ohio State, 11-0, boasting the 250-pound Pete Johnson—Mr. Inside—and two-time Heisman Trophy winner Archie Griffin—Mr. Outside—goes after the national championship in its matchup against UCLA, 8-2-1, and, in the Orange Bowl in Miami, Oklahoma, 10-1 and last year's national champion, battles Michigan, 8-1-2, the first Big Ten team to appear in a bowl game other than the Rose Bowl.

Huskers Surprise With 56-49 Win Over Pokes In Tourney

By VIRGIL PARKER
Kansas City — Nebraska won its fifth road game in six tries here Tuesday night to claim the consolation championship (fifth place) in the 30th annual Big Eight Preseason Basketball Tournament in Kemper Arena.

Coach Joe Cipriano's Huskers topped Oklahoma State, 56-49, despite going eight minutes during the second half without a field goal.

"The offense caused the problem, not the defense," Cipriano observed. "They seemed to be playing tired. They were just standing around. There wasn't any movement. We finally got some motion and got things going again."

The game was tied 10 times in the first half — the last at 27-all — before three Jerry Fort baskets sparked Nebraska to a 37-29 halftime advantage.

A minute into the second half, Fort talked again — he had 18 points by intermission — but then Nebraska hit its dry spell.

From a 39-31 lead, Oklahoma State rattled off nine straight points to take a 40-39 edge.

Fort, first with two free throws and finally a fielder, pushed the Huskers back on top, 43-40, a lead they never lost.

Oklahoma State closed the gap to one on a steal and easy basket by Alan Rehrig, but Harris countered with an offensive tip.

Kansas City — Kansas threw a scare into highly favored Missouri here Tuesday night before the Tigers, with a late spurt, claimed the championship of the 30th annual Big Eight Pre-Season Basketball Tournament.

Before a Kemper Arena crowd of 14,958 — which pushed the tourney's four-day total to a record 57,797 — Missouri broke a 57-57 deadlock in the last eight minutes to record a 79-69 triumph.

It was the fourth title for Missouri in the last five years. Kansas was the defending champ and also claimed the crown in 1970. Missouri won the three intervening seasons. Thus the two clubs have captured the last six preseason tourney titles.

The Tiger triumph helped even up a lopsided Kansas advantage in previous Kansas City meetings. Of nine previous Big Eight tourney matchups, the Jayhawks had captured eight.

Kansas, which squeezed past Nebraska 69-66 in its opening test, overcame an 11-point first-half deficit to challenge the Tigers.

Mizzou, which looked like a world-beater while registering an 86-66 semifinal victory over Kansas State, started out like it was going to make the title tilt a runaway.

Coach Norm Stewart's Columbia club was quickly in front 10-4 and pushed the bulge to 11 at 34-23 with six minutes left in the first half.

That's when the Jayhawks made their move.

Eight straight points, six of them by Norm Cook, closed the gap to four at 34-31. When Cook added a pair of free throws with two seconds left before intermission, the Tigers were down to a slim 41-39 edge to take to the dressing room.

Coach Ted Owens' Jayhawks kept up the pressure at the start of the second stanza. After knotting the count three times at 41, 43 and 45, Kansas rattled off six straight points to take a 51-45 lead.

Herb Nobles and 7-1 freshman Paul Mokeski sparked the spurt. But then the 'Hawks ran out of gas.

Missouri pulled even at 53-all — again at the 55 and 57 level — then quickly pulled out in front by 10. While Kansas was limited to a pair of Nobles free throws, the Tigers knocked in 12 points to settle the issue.

That was the final margin and the 'Hawks never got closer during the final five minutes as the two clubs traded baskets until the end.

"It wasn't too pretty and we didn't execute too well," Mizzou coach Norm Stewart said, "but after two weeks on the road we've got to be happy with the final result."

Mizzou's Willie Smith, after leading all scorers with 27 points, was named the tournament's Most Outstanding Player.

"He's very important to us," Stewart said of Smith. "I certainly thought he was deserving of the MVP trophy."

Smith was joined by teammate Jim Kennedy, K-State's Chuckie Williams and a pair of Jayhawks — Clint Johnson and Norm Cook — on the all-tourney team.

Nebraska's Jerry Fort and Larry Cox were chosen to the second team, along with Missouri freshman Stan Ray, KU's big frosh, Mokeski, and Colorado's Dave Logan, who just returned to the basketball floor after playing for the Buffs in the Bluebonnet Bowl football game last Saturday.

Fort, who had a tourney-high single game scoring mark of 29 against Oklahoma State, finished third in the MVP voting.

TV Series Starts Saturday
The Big Eight Conference begins its 10-game basketball television series Saturday afternoon with a game featuring Oklahoma, under new coach Dave Bliss, and independent Oral Roberts.

Nevada-Las Vegas, ranked in the top ten, will oppose winless Iowa State in the second game Jan. 10. After that, the remaining eight contests will be Big Eight Conference games, starting off with the Nebraska at Kansas State game Jan. 17.

The Huskers also are scheduled to face Oklahoma State in Lincoln in a televised game Feb. 28. The final game on March 6 will be picked by the conference, presumably featuring the champion, if the title has been decided, or the key game that afternoon.

Looking at the schedule on the final day of the season, there doesn't appear to be an attractive game to be played — Iowa State at Nebraska, Colorado at Missouri, Kansas at Oklahoma and Kansas State at Oklahoma State.

Oklahoma bounced back to whip Iowa State 71-51 Tuesday in the Big Eight Tournament and now has a 3-7 record. Oral Roberts has a 6-2 record.

Oral Roberts is led by Anthony Roberts, a 6-5 "Independent" All-American who is averaging 22.3 points.

Talking About Money
It's probably difficult for basketball fans in Nebraska to realize what a really top-notch program such as Indiana can produce in the way of revenue for the operation of the total sports program, considering that the Husker basketball team finished in the red a year ago.

Figures on the Indiana program came out in testimony recently in the suit brought by Coach Bobby Knight against the NCAA in an attempt to get the 10-man travel limit lifted.

Indiana business manager Robert Harrell presented figures showing the Hoosier basketball program has an anticipated gross income of $725,000 this year, $380,000 in anticipated expenses and $335,000 net profit. He estimated the enforcement of the 10-man limit would save Indiana $1,740 this season.

Indiana made about $80,000 on its televised game against UCLA and picked up an additional $130,000 for two games in Indianapolis. Additionally, the Hoosier home season sold out long ago, so much so that 18,000 student season tickets were sold, but students can only attend half of the home games.

Nebraska has a couple of home games in the next few days, and with students out of town for the holidays, plenty of tickets will be available. Believe me, the Huskers are worth watching and there'll be some exciting action the rest of the season.

South Dakota plays at the Coliseum Saturday and nationally-prominent South Carolina comes in next Tuesday. The conference home opener will be Jan. 21 against Oklahoma.

With seven minutes left to play it was 46-44 after a Fred Stevenson basket for OSU, but the Cowboys never got that close again.

Steve Willis and Fort hit fielders for a 50-44 Nebraska lead and Cipriano ordered the Huskers into a delay game.

Four of Nebraska's final six points came in the last 41 seconds on Cox and Harris crisscrossing after breaking through Oklahoma State's chasing defense.

"Rickey Harris came off the bench to give us great help on the boards," Cipriano noted. "Bob Siegel was also effective rebounding and certainly played one of his better games."

Siegel led all rebounders with nine caroms, while Harris had four during his short-term duty.

Fort paced the scorers with 28 points on 10 of 23 from the field and a perfect eight for eight from the charity stripe.

"Jerry is showing that he's coming back to form," Cipriano said. "He played both ends of the court tonight. He played good defense and was much smoother in his shooting."

OSU coach Guy Strong thought his Cowboys were "awfully sluggish in the first half. It was good to see our kids come back and play as well as they did in the second half. We just haven't gotten things together yet. Ronnie Daniel was one for 10 and Olus Holder was three of 11 from the field. Ronnie has to play better for us to win."

Strong had praise for Dave Kragel. "Not only did he get 19 points and rebound well, but he did a super defensive job on Larry Cox, who is one of the best centers in the league."

By RANDY YORK
Prep Sports Editor
After his team's biggest win in three years, Lincoln High basketball coach Aldie Johnson wasn't about to condemn holiday tournaments.

The Links knocked Lincoln Southeast on the unbeaten ranks with a 50-45 triumph before 2,500 at Johnson Gym Tuesday night.

It completed the second phase of holiday tournament irony in

LHS Girls Take Crown With Win Over Knights

By CHUCK SINCLAIR
Prep Sports Writer
When Lincoln High's man-to-man defense went sour against Papillion in the first round of the I-80 Holiday Tournament Monday, girls coach Joyce Johnson figured the zone might work better in Tuesday's finals against Southeast.

For the first half, the 2-1-2 did the trick, but the Links had to go back to the man-to-man late in the fourth quarter to clinch the title game with a 37-32 triumph over the Knights in a battle of two unbeaten before 1,900 fans.

Lincoln High opened a 19-4 lead seconds into the second quarter when Southeast coach Jerry Harkrader inserted 5-6 junior guard Tammy Poe into the lineup.

Poe sparked Knights

Poe began by connecting on two straight 15-footers sparking a Southeast surge that made a game or what appeared to be an early runaway.

Shooting all of her field goals from the corner, Poe ripped the net on seven of 10 tries and added two free throws for 16 points.

But a switch to a tight man-to-man with 4:33 left in the game shut down Poe's effectiveness as the Knights could manage just one free throw after the change while trailing, 35-31.

"We possibly could have switched defenses earlier and it would have helped," Johnson said. "But our zone usually works pretty good and we thought we could put enough pressure on her (Poe) outside."

Weren't Playing Well
"Against Papillion, we weren't playing the man-to-man defense very well and they hurt us on the screens, but we prepared ourselves a little better for this," she added.

"I can see by this game tonight

Rozelle Rule Removal Won't Hurt NFL Play

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — The National Football League's rule that prohibits open-market bidding for players was struck down Tuesday in a landmark decision by a federal judge who said elimination of the Rozelle Rule would not harm the league's competitive balance or quality of play.

The decision by U.S. District Judge Earl R. Larson said the Rozelle Rule violates antitrust laws and is therefore illegal. He directed the NFL and its 26 teams to cease enforcing the rule but delayed enforcement of his decision pending the expected league appeals.

The decision was a major blow to the NFL, which has argued that the Rozelle Rule prevented wealthy teams from simply buying the quality players needed to win championships. The ruling says, in effect, that players are free to sell their services to the highest bidder and the league has said if that happens more than half its teams could be forced to fold.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, after whom the rule is named, said there would be no decision on an appeal until after league attorneys had reviewed the order.

But Rozelle said the NFL was "disappointed . . . We had hoped that the court would find the antitrust laws to be sufficiently flexible to accommodate the unique and special needs of a professional football league. Such leagues depend on competitive balance and the quality of their teams for fans interest in each season's schedule. We continue to believe that . . . team-equalization rules have served and will continue to serve the interest of fans, players and clubs alike."

Judge Larson disagreed. He said in the ruling, "The quality of play in the NFL will not decrease with the elimination of the Rozelle Rule and consequent freedom of employment. Even assuming the quality of play would decrease, that fact does not justify the rule's anticompetitive nature."

Larson added, "The court finds that the existence of the Rozelle Rule and other restrictive devices on players have not had any material effect on competitive balance . . . Assuming that they have fostered competitive balance, other legal means are available to pursue this goal." As examples, he cited multiyear contracts and special incentives as ways to keep a player tied to one club.

A player becomes a free agent, able to deal with other clubs, after playing one year beyond his contract. However, the team he signs with must compensate his old team with players or draft choices. If the two teams can't agree on compensation, Rozelle sets the terms.

The players contend this restricts their freedom of movement. They say a team will be wary of signing a free agent without knowing who will be taken as compensation, and Larson directly supported those arguments.

The impact of the ruling was not expected to be felt immediately in the day-to-day operations of the NFL, since an appeal was virtually certain. It could be years before the case reaches the U.S. Supreme Court, where it is likely headed.

The league claimed it could not operate with a free market system. Some officials said the NFL would perish without the Rozelle Rule and other restrictions, others said the league's 26 clubs would shrink to 12 or less.

Larson disagreed. And he said the Rozelle Rule restricts players' freedom of movement, decreases their bargaining power and keeps their salaries lower than if competitive bidding were allowed to prevail.

The judge said the rule was "unreasonable in that it is unlimited in duration. It is a perpetual restriction on a player, point with two-and-a-half minutes to play, 55-54.

But Dave Logan, who just rejoined the cage squad after playing for the CU football team in the Bluebonnet Bowl, missed a pair of free throws and a short jumper in the closing moments and K-State managed six straight points for a 60-55 victory.

The final five-point spread was the largest of a game that was tied 16 times and saw the lead change hands on 12 occasions.

Coach Jack Hartman picked up his 100th win as a Wildcat mentor, despite the fact that his club played without enthusiasm. K-State figured on being in the title tilt and didn't play like they Lincoln on the heels of Northeast's conquest of East last weekend.

The two winning coaches, Northeast's Ed Johnson and Lincoln High's Aldie, have been against Christmas tournaments for years and been instrumental in keeping the Capital City ban on such competition.

Despite Northeast's tourney win, Ed remained opposed to holiday tournaments. Aldie is more open-minded now.

"I still have mixed emotions," he said after the youthful Links' fourth victory in six games. "But if the kids like them, then they're good. The kids should be No. 1."

"I'm still opposed to an eight-team setup, which would interfere with the family aspect of Christmas," Aldie added.

"But," he said, "the name of the game is competition and I've always been for that. I wouldn't have my wife if it hadn't been for competition."

The Links reflected their coach's competitiveness in the Eastern I-80 holiday championship.

Southeast scored six points within 18 seconds to reduce a 47-39 Lincoln High lead to only 47-45 with 1:12 remaining and the Links, playing a good share of the second half with two sophomores and two juniors in the lineup, could have buckled right there.

But Charlie Metzger hit a free throw with 30 seconds left and fellow senior Russ Shepard added two more with 12 seconds remaining to put Southeast out of reach of a possible sixth straight victory.

Zone Effective
A combination 1-2-2 zone accomplished Lincoln High's impressive ambush. The 6-3, Metzger, 6-5 junior Jerry Heckman and 6-2½ sophomore Nathan Woods combined to shut down Southeast's 6-7 Dave Griffin.

Griffin, shooting 54 per cent from the field in the Knights' first five games, managed to hit only 4 of 15 field goal attempts.

Five of those were errant "Bill Walton" tip attempts off high lob feeds.

While the Knights struggled to crack Lincoln High's zone, the Links hit at 48 per cent field goal accuracy. Balance was the key with Heckman and Shepard each netting 12 points and Metzger and sophomore Ralph McWilliams depositing eight apiece.

season Southeast has faced a zone for most of the game. "In many ways we're a seasoned ball club," Southeast coach Wally McNaught said, "but in many ways we're young, too."

"We just didn't attack the zone right and I'm partly to blame," he said, lamenting 31 per cent shooting compared to the Knights' 47 per cent marksmanship entering the contest.

The same two teams will square off a week from Friday night at Pershing Auditorium.

Inspirational Shot
Deb Van Dusen had eight points for the Links, but her last basket, a 25-foot set shot at the third-quarter buzzer, was inspirational to the team according to Johnson.

Both teams are idle until after the holiday break when Southeast will be host to Grand Island Jan. 6 and Ralston travels to Lincoln High Jan. 8.

Kentucky Nips Irish, 79-77

Louisville, Ky. (AP) — Rick Robey's tip-in after a missed free throw with two minutes left gave Kentucky all the margin it needed to upset fifth-ranked Notre Dame 79-77 in a wild college basketball game Tuesday night.

Robey grabbed Larry Johnson's missed free throw and put it back in for a 79-75 Kentucky lead. Notre Dame moved within 77-77 with 35 seconds left when Adrian Dantley, the game's high scorer with 28 points, muscled in a layup.

But Notre Dame's last scoring opportunity, Dantley's 35-footer with three seconds left, was off the mark.

The Rozelle Rule was adopted by club owners in 1963 as part of the NFL constitution and by-laws. It has been moved five times by Rozelle. Rozelle Rule Removal Won't Hurt NFL Play

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. (AP) — The National Football League's rule that prohibits open-market bidding for players was struck down Tuesday in a landmark decision by a federal judge who said elimination of the Rozelle Rule would not harm the league's competitive balance or quality of play.

The decision by U.S. District Judge Earl R. Larson said the Rozelle Rule violates antitrust laws and is therefore illegal. He directed the NFL and its 26 teams to cease enforcing the rule but delayed enforcement of his decision pending the expected league appeals.

The decision was a major blow to the NFL, which has argued that the Rozelle Rule prevented wealthy teams from simply buying the quality players needed to win championships. The ruling says, in effect, that players are free to sell their services to the highest bidder and the league has said if that happens more than half its teams could be forced to fold.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, after whom the rule is named, said there would be no decision on an appeal until after league attorneys had reviewed the order.

But Rozelle said the NFL was "disappointed . . . We had hoped that the court would find the antitrust laws to be sufficiently flexible to accommodate the unique and special needs of a professional football league. Such leagues depend on competitive balance and the quality of their teams for fans interest in each season's schedule. We continue to believe that . . . team-equalization rules have served and will continue to serve the interest of fans, players and clubs alike."

Judge Larson disagreed. He said in the ruling, "The quality of play in the NFL will not decrease with the elimination of the Rozelle Rule and consequent freedom of employment. Even assuming the quality of play would decrease, that fact does not justify the rule's anticompetitive nature."

Larson added, "The court finds that the existence of the Rozelle Rule and other restrictive devices on players have not had any material effect on competitive balance . . . Assuming that they have fostered competitive balance, other legal means are available to pursue this goal." As examples, he cited multiyear contracts and special incentives as ways to keep a player tied to one club.

A player becomes a free agent, able to deal with other clubs, after playing one year beyond his contract. However, the team he signs with must compensate his old team with players or draft choices. If the two teams can't agree on compensation, Rozelle sets the terms.

The players contend this restricts their freedom of movement. They say a team will be wary of signing a free agent without knowing who will be taken as compensation, and Larson directly supported those arguments.

The impact of the ruling was not expected to be felt immediately in the day-to-day operations of the NFL, since an appeal was virtually certain. It could be years before the case reaches the U.S. Supreme Court, where it is likely headed.

The league claimed it could not operate with a free market system. Some officials said the NFL would perish without the Rozelle Rule and other restrictions, others said the league's 26 clubs would shrink to 12 or less.

NCAA 'Super Bowl' Plan Ready For Members' Vote

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Major college football will have a national championship tournament in 1976 if the National Collegiate Athletic Association's January convention accepts the college "Super Bowl" plan already approved by the NCAA executive committee.

The NCAA's Division I Football Championship Feasibility Committee, headed by Temple Athletic Director Ernie Casale, developed a proposal for a four-team championship series to be held in the first two weeks of January. The committee voted 8-4 to ask membership approval.

The feasibility committee approval is considered an upset, since some members from conferences unilaterally opposed a national college football championship. These conferences believe it would damage the lucrative bowl games.

Actually, the national championship plan uses the bowls as elimination games leading to the selection of the final four. The plan provides for two semifinal games on the first Saturday of the new year, and the championship game on the second Saturday, or possibly Monday night.

Huskers' Cox On NCAA List

Mission, Kan. (UPI) — Dayton's Fred Eckert must wonder what he has to do to claim the major college free throw percentage lead.

Eckert has hit all 19 of his free throws in eight games so far but all he can do is share the percentage lead with Bob Huggins of Western Virginia, who has hit eight of eight in three games, and Al Winder of Houston, who is 10 for 10 in four games, according to this week's NCAA statistics.

There's a lot more breathing room in scoring where Marshall Rogers of Pan American is the leader with a 35.8 average. Freeman Williams of Portland State is a distant second at 29.8 and is being pressured by Lafayette's Todd Tripucka, who has averaged 29.7.

Anderson Wins Bengals' MVP

Cincinnati (UPI) — Ken Anderson, who won his second straight Cincinnati Bengals' Most Valuable Player award Tuesday, predicted the future "holds nothing but good things for the Bengals."

"We're a young team and I expect us to be even better next year," said the quarterback who led Cincinnati to an overall 11-4 record this season. "Two of our losses were to the defending world champions (Pittsburgh). We've got a good future."

Casale explains that the NCAA Football Championship Feasibility Committee would use the results of 11 bowl games as well as the Top Ten poll in selecting the four teams for the final series. He says nothing in the plan precludes the bowl organizations from sponsoring a playoff game in addition to its bowl game.

"We realized that we would never get by the convention if we interfered with the present bowl structure," Casale said.

That's why the championship football proposal is unlike the structure of the basketball playoffs in which 32 teams are picked by NCAA selection committees for the tournament.

Casale said his committee explored the date possibilities and decided on the first two weeks in January, because most colleges are either between semesters or in the process of registration.

One of the minority objections to a championship game, in addition to the bowl issue, was that it would make the season too long. Casale counters that the basketball season is longer, and that baseball requires more missed classes than football.

Casale foresees the Football Championship Feasibility Committee holding a telephone conference on Jan. 2 to select the final four.

As for the site of the games, Casale said NCAA members could apply as hosts the same as they do in other championship events. He does see the game, however, in a warm weather climate, unless it was played in an enclosed stadium.

Sites for NCAA championships usually are selected two to five years in advance.

Casale sees the financial aspect of the championship series as a bonanza for colleges and universities and the NCAA. He expects a multi-million dollar television package, an extension of the regular season contract.

Malone Drafted By New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Moses Malone, the first player to jump directly from high school to the pros, was drafted by the National Basketball Association's New Orleans franchise Tuesday and it was learned his attorney already has begun negotiations on a possible contract.

Malone was the biggest catch Tuesday in the NBA's special draft of some of the brightest young talent from the American Basketball Association. When Bill Bertka, vice president of basketball operations for the Jazz, said: "New Orleans selects Moses Malone," he must have known something.

The Associated Press learned Tuesday that Malone's attorney, Lee Fentress of Bethesda, Md., already has spoken with the Jazz about signing Malone.

On Dec. 1, Fentress went to the offices of Simon Gourdine, deputy commissioner of the NBA, to seek a clarification of the NBA's position regarding Malone. Fentress said he told Gourdine that there may not have been a valid assignment when Malone's contact went from Utah to St. Louis following the folding of the Stars.

"We've been having talks with New Orleans and we will continue to do so," said Fentress.

"The revenue would be enormous," Casale said. "The television revenue would provide more money for the teams who participated in that season's TV package."

"Part would go to the teams in the playoffs, part to the NCAA, part could go into a fund to pay expenses of any participant in any NCAA championship whether it be Division I, II, or III. I think it would draw the largest TV audience ever for a football game."

Casale said his committee has an alternate proposal to the four-team series, a one-game shot involving the two teams picked by the selection committee. He prefers the four-game idea, because of the "almost impossible job" of picking the two best teams.

What are the chances of the proposal being passed by the NCAA Division I members? Casale will say only that it would pass in his area, where it has the strong support of Penn State Coach Joe Paterno.

"Intercollegiate athletics has been searching for new income for years and now we have $5 million to $10 million waiting to be had and we need it," says Paterno.

"The NCAA could take that money and set up something like the World Bank," Paterno suggested. "Get some financial experts to run the thing and not touch the money for four or five years. Make it work."

"When we have $40 million or $50 million, use it as an endowment for grants or low interest loans to schools that might be in danger of dropping a sport, or to a school trying to fund a new field house. . . . I think all other arguments become ludicrous. They're just smokescreens."

The proposal could pass, but still fall on its face, if it doesn't receive the support of all its members. If the plan cannot force every member to participate, it would not accomplish the major aim—to find out on the playing field who is No. 1.

"Suffice it to say that there may not have been a valid assignment of contract and Moses Malone may soon play in the NBA."

In New Orleans, Bertka denied he had ever talked with Malone or any of Malone's lawyers.

Gourdine confirmed that one of Malone's attorneys had contacted him, saying that the lawyer felt that Malone's contract with the ABA was in default.

That conversation triggered the special draft, which was "for the purpose of cleaning up our house," said Larry O'Brien, commissioner of the NBA. "All that has occurred is that we were identifying the rights of the NBA teams for these players in the event they become clear of all prior contractual commitments."

The Jazz had the first crack at the five players who never were drafted by the NBA since they were signed by the ABA while underclassmen, and their college classes have still not graduated.

In choosing Malone, a 20-year-old standout with the Utah Stars in his rookie season last year, the Jazz gave up their next available No. 1 pick, which is for 1977 because the Jazz lost their 1976 first-round pick in a prior trade.

"The New Orleans Jazz simply exercised its right to draft and obtain the rights to Moses Malone," Bertka said. "If now and at some future date he's free of any contractual commitment, we want to sit down and negotiate with him."

The Los Angeles Lakers, drafting immediately after New Orleans, selected Mark Olberding of the San Antonio Spurs, who picked up the 6-foot-8 strongman in the dispersal draft after the San Diego Sails folded last month.

Olberding, who left the University of Minnesota after his freshman year, was averaging 12.2 points and 7.9 rebounds in his rookie ABA season.

Bennett left the University of Pittsburgh after his freshman year to join the financially-troubled Virginia Squires. In his rookie year, he's averaging 8.8 points and 4.7 rebounds.

In the third round, Golden State picked Skip Wise, who left Clemson after his freshman year to join the now-defunct Baltimore Claws. Wise moved to the San Antonio Spurs, who waived him after two games. He had not signed with any team and thus was available to be signed now by the Warriors. However, the Warriors said they have no immediate plans to sign Wise.

Michael L. Alexander, 22, of 2744 Vine, was charged with first degree sexual assault Tuesday in connection with the rape of a 12-year-old girl.

According to police reports the girl was at the man's house to babysit.

A preliminary hearing in the case will be set on Jan. 13. Bond was set at $3,500.

I-80 Restaurant Items Found; Suspect Held

Many of the items stolen in a Dec. 1 burglary at the Nickerson Farms Restaurant at Interstate 80 and Hwy. 6 have been recovered, according to the Lancaster County sheriff's office.

Turquoise jewelry, copper cooking and eating utensils and a microwave oven, valued at a total of about $2,000 were taken. Deputies said the items were recovered with the arrest of a 17-year-old youth in Cottage Grove, Minn. A warrant has been issued from Lancaster County charging him with the burglary. He is being held in Cottage Grove on another burglary charge, deputies said.

Burbach Defends Corporate Farm Reports

Hartington (AP) — State Sen. Jules Burbach disagrees with Secretary of State Allen Beermann over a new state law requiring reports from some 6,000 corporate farms in Nebraska.

Beermann said it may be an early target for repeal in the 1976 Legislature, but Burbach said Tuesday this is not the time to think about repealing it.

"This bill is going to serve a

Keys Charged With Robbery

A 17-year-old man was charged with robbery Tuesday in connection with a Dec. 23 incident in which a man was awakened in his bedroom by the sounds of people carrying away his belongings.

Michael T. Waldron, of 2251 Sheldon, told police a man poked his head around the bedroom door, pointed a gun at him and told him to put his head under his pillow. Waldron did as he was told.

Charged in connection with the incident was Preston Keys. A preliminary hearing will be set on Jan. 13. Bond was set at $5,000.

Taken from Waldron's home were stereo equipment, a billfold and a camera, valued at about $710.

Burbach Defends Corporate Farm Reports

He said that if three or four years of experience indicates there is no problem, then the bill can be repealed. "But certainly not at this time. Let's make a determination."

Beermann's office has received about 900 of the reports so far, and about 5,000 more are expected. There is a maximum $1,000 fine for failure to file by Jan. 1.

Beermann described the con-

'Bama Strayers Prepared For Sugar Bowl

By The Associated Press

Alabama, following the motto of the team that strays together—stays together, prepared for Wednesday night's Sugar Bowl date with Penn State with excellent practices on the field and an impromptu late team meeting in New Orleans.

Nearly two platoons of the Crimson Tide—reportedly 23 players—went on extra period in Fat City, missing an 11 p.m. curfew Sunday night. Most of the tardy players were starters, including quarterback Richard Todd.

Alabama Coach Bear Bryant, noted for his severe disciplinary tactics over the years, did not suspend any of the 23 players.

Bryant said his once-beaten Alabama team had buckled down to its on-the-field task as well as any team he has ever coached. "It's the best preparation we've had in 25 years," said Bryant. "Their attention to practice has been exceptional."

"That means they're disciplined part of the day, not all the time," Bryant said.

The curfew violations threw some of the spotlight off Bryant who has been criticized in some quarters for hand-picking Penn State, 9-2, as his opponent, rather than playing against Nebraska. Alabama, 10-1, has not won a bowl game in its last eight tries, and hopes to break the spell, against the Nittany Lions in the 42nd Sugar Bowl.

Also set for Wednesday is the Peach Bowl, which matches West Virginia, 8-3, and North Carolina State, 7-3-1.

Bryant, who suspended star quarterback Joe Namath in a celebrated incident before the Sugar Bowl game in 1964, took softer measures this time, indicating perhaps a philosophic mellowing with the times or a pragmatic view that you can't end an eight-game bowl winning streak without 23 of your best players.

The fiery coach verbally blasted his players at a team meeting, then "I had Charlie Thornton (Alabama's sports information director) call the boys' hometown newspapers," Bryant said. "So their friends and moms and daddies can read what they did."

"Let them explain that around the barber shop when they get home."

Bryant said some of the players missed curfew by 15 minutes, others by more than an hour. "It makes no difference," he said. "This team isn't disciplined. But how many teams are disciplined now? Not many."

"There are only a few football teams that are disciplined," Bryant said. "Alabama State is one. The Miami Dolphins are one. I don't know what it is—the parents, the coaches or what. Maybe it's our coaching that's wrong. But they aren't disciplined."

Talk circulating from Atlanta, site of the Peach Bowl, centers on the weather and whether North Carolina State Coach Lou Holtz is headed for the pros.

Holtz said he had been contacted by the New Orleans Saints of the National Football League, adding "New Orleans is a good opportunity for someone, but I am happy at North Carolina State."

Holtz would be a lot happier if his star running back Ted Brown were certain to play.

Brown, a 5-foot-8, 180-pound freshman who is recovering from a hip injury, rushed 142 times for 913 yards and 13 touchdowns this season.

"Right now, we are making preparations to go without using him in the game at all," Holtz said.

Holtz would also be happier if the sun began shining. Workouts have been hampered by the rain, which has also plagued this bowl game for the past seven years.

The last time these two teams met, North Carolina State

bombarded West Virginia 40-13 in the 1972 Peach Bowl.

Wednesday's action is merely an appetizer for the college football gourmet, whose appetite should be whetted by the following New Year's Day fare:

In the Cotton Bowl at Dallas, Arkansas, 9-2, meets Georgia, 9-2, in a battle of berserk running offenses; in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif., No. 1 ranked Ohio State, 11-0, boasting the 250-pound Pete Johnson—Mr. Inside—and two-time Heisman Trophy winner Archie Griffin—Mr. Outside—goes after the national championship in its matchup against UCLA, 8-2-1, and, in the Orange Bowl in Miami, Oklahoma, 10-1 and last year's national champion, battles Michigan, 8-1-2, the first Big Ten team to appear in a bowl game other than the Rose Bowl.

Morning Briefing

A Sports Roundup

FOOTBALL

Los Angeles Rams coach Chuck Knox expects to start James Harris Sunday against the Dallas Cowboys because the quarterback has sufficiently recovered from a shoulder injury.

Passengers on the way Tuesday to see Alabama challenge Penn State in New Orleans' Superdome Wednesday watched their Delta Airlines jet skid off the rain-slicked runway at Kenner, La., but no injuries or damage was reported.

Southern Illinois University named Ray Dempsey, 39, as its head football coach Tuesday. The former head coach at Youngstown State had been an assistant coach with the Detroit Lions of the National Football League this season.

Miami Dolphins quarterback Earl Morrall's 42-year-old knee is expected to recover in time for the 20-year NFL veteran to play next season. Morrall had successful knee surgery Monday and his leg will be in a cast for two months beginning next week.

Attorneys for Rommie Loud, former professional football promoter, Tuesday filed a notice that they will appeal the former UCLA linebacker's conviction on a charge of selling cocaine. The appeal will charge that the jury was racially prejudiced against Loud, 42, a black.

BASKETBALL

Taiwan will get a chance for its seventh straight Little League World Series crown next year. The board of directors of Little League, Inc., Tuesday, by a vote of 12 to 1, rescinded its 1974 ban on foreign teams playing for the world title.

New York Mets star pitcher Tom Seaver finished in the money again, Tuesday being named the National League's Player of the Year by the Kansas City Baseball Writers Association. Seaver, who earlier this year won his third Cy Young Award, joins Sandy Koufax as the only pitchers to win the player award three times.

OTHER SPORTS

Max McNab was named Tuesday to replace Milt Schmidt as general manager of the National Hockey League's lowly Washington Capitals. McNab named Tommie McVie of Dayton as his head coach to succeed Schmidt, who resigned Monday.

Bulgaria's Hristo Plachkov set a world weightlifting record by lifting 96½ pounds in the super-heavyweight class. Plachkov's record is 5½ pounds better than the former mark by Russia's Vassily Alexeyev.

Omaha Preps Lead Class A

Metropolitan area Omaha wrestlers dominate the Class A wrestling released by the Nebraska Scholastic Wrestling Coaches Assn. (NSWCA) Wednesday.

Wrestlers from Omaha, Millard, Ralston and Bellevue commanded the top ratings in 10 of the 12 weight divisions with Norfolk's Kent Bellevue (126) and Lincoln Northeast's Kirby Monahan (Hwt) the only outsiders to lead their divisions.

State coaches are urged to send rating information to these outlets: Class A, Tom McCann of Kearney; Class B, Boyd Blumenkemp of O'Neill; Class C, Rick Allgood of Bennington and Class D, Norm Manstedt of Clarks.

Omaha Royals took third place with a 37-10 win over Lincoln North Stars.

NCAA 'Super Bowl' Plan Ready For Members' Vote

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Major college football will have a national championship tournament in 1976 if the National Collegiate Athletic Association's January convention accepts the college "Super Bowl" plan already approved by the NCAA executive committee.

The NCAA's Division I Football Championship Feasibility Committee, headed by Temple Athletic Director Ernie Casale, developed a proposal for a four-team championship series to be held in the first two weeks of January. The committee voted 8-4 to ask membership approval.

The feasibility committee approval is considered an upset, since some members from conferences unilaterally opposed a national college football championship. These conferences believe it would damage the lucrative bowl games.

Actually, the national championship plan uses the bowls as elimination games leading to the selection of the final four. The plan provides for two semifinal games on the first Saturday of the new year, and the championship game on the second Saturday, or possibly Monday night.

Huskers' Cox On NCAA List

Mission, Kan. (UPI) — Dayton's Fred Eckert must wonder what he has to do to claim the major college free throw percentage lead.

Eckert has hit all 19 of his free throws in eight games so far but all he can do is share the percentage lead with Bob Huggins of Western Virginia, who has hit eight of eight in three games, and Al Winder of Houston, who is 10 for 10 in four games, according to this week's NCAA statistics.

There's a lot more breathing room in scoring where Marshall Rogers of Pan American is the leader with a 35.8 average. Freeman Williams of Portland State is a distant second at 29.8 and is being pressured by Lafayette's Todd Tripucka, who has averaged 29.7.

Anderson Wins Bengals' MVP

Cincinnati (UPI) — Ken Anderson, who won his second straight Cincinnati Bengals' Most Valuable Player award Tuesday, predicted the future "holds nothing but good things for the Bengals."

"We're a young team and I expect us to be even better next year," said the quarterback who led Cincinnati to an overall 11-4 record this season. "Two of our losses were to the defending world champions (Pittsburgh). We've got a good future."

Casale explains that the NCAA Football Championship Feasibility Committee would use the results of 11 bowl games as well as the Top Ten poll in selecting the four teams for the final series. He says nothing in the plan precludes the bowl organizations from sponsoring a playoff game in addition to its bowl game.

"We realized that we would never get by the convention if we interfered with the present bowl structure," Casale said.

That's why the championship football proposal is unlike the structure of the basketball playoffs in which 32 teams are picked as NCAA selection committees for the tournament.

Casale said his committee explored the date possibilities and decided on the first two weeks in January, because most colleges are either between semesters or in the process of registration.

One of the minority objections to a championship game, in addition to the bowl issue, was that it would make the season too long. Casale counters that the basketball season is longer, and that baseball requires more missed classes than football.

Casale foresees the Football Championship Feasibility Committee holding a telephone conference on Jan. 2 to select the final four.

As for the site of the games, Casale said NCAA members could apply as hosts the same as they do in other championship events. He does see the game, however, in a warm weather climate, unless it was played in an enclosed stadium.

Sites for NCAA championships usually are selected two to five years in advance.

Casale sees the financial aspect of the championship series as a bonanza for colleges and universities and the NCAA. He expects a multi-million dollar television package, an extension of the regular season contract.

Malone Drafted By New Orleans

NEW YORK (AP) — Moses Malone, the first player to jump directly from high school to the pros, was drafted by the National Basketball Association's New Orleans franchise Tuesday and it was learned his attorney already has begun negotiations on a possible contract.

Malone was the biggest catch Tuesday in the NBA's special draft of some of the brightest young talent from the American Basketball Association. When Bill Bertka, vice president of basketball operations for the Jazz, said: "New Orleans selects Moses Malone," he must have known something.

The Associated Press learned Tuesday that Malone's attorney, Lee Fentress of Bethesda, Md., already has spoken with the Jazz about signing Malone.

On Dec. 1, Fentress went to the offices of Simon Gourdine, deputy commissioner of the NBA, to seek a clarification of the NBA's position regarding Malone. Fentress said he told Gourdine that there may not have been a valid assignment when Malone's contract went from Utah to St. Louis following the folding of the Stars.

"We've been having talks with New Orleans and we will continue to do so," said Fentress.

"The revenue would be enormous," Casale said. "The television revenue would provide more money for the teams who participated in that season's TV package."

"Part would go to the teams in the playoffs, part to the NCAA, part could go into a fund to pay expenses of any participant in any NCAA championship whether it be Division I, II, or III. I think it would draw the largest TV audience ever for a football game."

Casale said his committee has an alternate proposal to the four-team series, a one-game shot involving the two teams picked by the selection committee. He prefers the four-game idea, because of the "almost impossible job" of picking the two best teams.

What are the chances of the proposal being passed by the NCAA Division I members? Casale will say only that it would pass in his area, where it has the strong support of Penn State Coach Joe Paterno.

"Intercollegiate athletics has been searching for new income for years and now we have $5 million to $10 million waiting to be had and we need it," says Paterno.

"The NCAA could take that money and set up something like the World Bank," Paterno suggested. "Get some financial experts to run the thing and not touch the money for four or five years. Make it work."

"When we have $40 million or $50 million, use it as an endowment for grants or low interest loans to schools that might be in danger of dropping a sport, or to a school trying to fund a new field house. . . I think all other arguments become ludicrous. They're just smokecreens."

The proposal could pass, but still fall on its face, if it doesn't receive the support of all its members. If the plan cannot force every member to participate, it would not accomplish the major aim—to find out on the playing field who is No. 1.

"Suffice it to say that there may not have been a valid assignment of contract and Moses Malone may soon play in the NBA."

In New Orleans, Bertka denied he had ever talked with Malone or any of Malone's lawyers.

Gourdine confirmed that one of Malone's attorneys had contacted him, saying that the lawyer felt that Malone's contract with the ABA was in default.

That conversation triggered the special draft, which was "for the purpose of cleaning up our house," said Larry O'Brien, commissioner of the NBA. "All that has occurred is that we were identifying the rights of the NBA teams for these players in the event they become clear of all prior contractual commitments."

The Jazz had the first crack at the five players who never were drafted by the NBA since they were signed by the ABA while underclassmen, and their college classes have still not graduated.

In choosing Malone, a 20-year-old standout with the Utah Stars in his rookie season last year, the Jazz gave up their next available No. 1 pick, which is for 1977 because the Jazz lost their 1976 first-round pick in a prior trade.

"The New Orleans Jazz simply exercised its right to draft and obtain the rights to Moses Malone," Bertka said. "If now and at some future date he's free of any contractual commitment, we want to sit down and negotiate with him."

The Los Angeles Lakers, drafting immediately after New Orleans, selected Mark Olberding of the San Antonio Spurs, who picked up the 6-foot-8 strongman in the dispersal draft after the San Diego Sails folded last month.

Olberding, who left the University of Minnesota after his freshman year, was averaging 12.2 points and 7.9 rebounds in his rookie ABA season.

Bennett left the University of Pittsburgh after his freshman year to join the financially-troubled Virginia Squires, who waived him after two games. He had not signed with any team and thus was available to be signed now by the Warriors. However, the Warriors said they have no immediate plans to sign Wise.

In the third round, Golden State picked Skip Wise, who left Clemson after his freshman year to join the now-defunct Baltimore Claws. Wise moved to the San Antonio Spurs, who waived him after two games. He had not signed with any team and thus was available to be signed now by the Warriors. However, the Warriors said they have no immediate plans to sign Wise.

Keys Charged With Robbery

A 17-year-old man was charged with robbery Tuesday in connection with a Dec. 23 incident in which a man was awakened in his bedroom by the sounds of people carrying away his belongings.

Michael T. Waldron, of 2251 Sheldon, told police a man poked his head around the bedroom door, pointed a gun at him and told him to put his head under his pillow. Waldron did as he was told.

Charged in connection with the incident was Preston Keys. A preliminary hearing will be set on Jan. 13. Bond was set at $5,000.

Taken from Waldron's home were stereo equipment, a hi-fi and a camera, valued at about $710.

Burbach Defends Corporate Farm Reports

Hartington (AP) — State Sen. Jules Burbach disagrees with Secretary of State Allen Beermann over a new state law requiring reports from some 6,000 corporate farms in Nebraska.

Beermann said it may be an early target for repeal in the 1976 Legislature, but Burbach said Tuesday this is not the time to think about repealing it.

"This bill is going to serve a purpose to make a determination of other huge corporations coming into Nebraska to usurp the farmlands of our community," Burbach said.

Beermann's office has received about 900 of the reports so far, and about 5,000 more are expected. There is a maximum $1,000 fine for failure to file by Jan. 1.

Beermann described the contents of the reports as of little value. He said letters accompanying some of the reports used words like "harassment" and "another damned government report."

He said that if three or four years of experience indicates there is no problem, then the bill can be repealed. "But certainly not at this time. Let's make a determination."

Memphis Bank Sues Lincoln

Investment Firm

A Lincoln partnership formed to make investments in small, but growing concerns, is being sued in U.S. District Court for $544,637.

The suit was filed by the First National Bank of Memphis, Tenn., against Venture 70 Ltd. The bank claims it has loaned Venture 70 $6.6 million since 1972, of which $334,181, plus $164,618 in interest is still due. Venture 70 is reportedly almost liquidated at this time.

Asked what he would do if the bill came up for debate again, the Hartington senator said he would oppose a move to repeal it.

In addition to foreign ownership, the report requires details of farm location, total number of acres, and the names and addresses of all officers, directors and shareholders who own more than 10% stock.

No Plans Made To Close Down State Selective Service Offices

By United Press International

A state Selective Service official said Tuesday there are no plans at present to close any of the nine selective service offices in Nebraska.

Edwin Scott, deputy state director, disclaimed a report that the nine offices would be closed and said earlier plans to phase out six of the nine offices have been shelved for the present.

Exon Renames 7 To Groups

Gov. J. J. Exon announced Tuesday seven re-appointments to the Weather Modification Commission and the State Advisory Committee to the Office of Mental Retardation. Reappointed to the weather commission were Judson Cornette, of Alliance; J. S.

"As of now we don't know that we'll close anything at all," Scott said. He said a conversation with state Selective Service Director Ed Binder apparently was misunderstood and resulted in the reports of the nine closings.

Scott said there were plans at one time to phase out offices at O'Neill, Norfolk, Columbus, Omaha, Grand Island and North Platte, retaining offices in meetings, Marvel said, "make it more difficult to serve" for many, particularly those without substantial financial resources.

Lewis of Daykin; Leon Kumor, of Grant, and Ralph Luebeck, of Stamford.

Re-appointed to the advisory committee were Dr. Jack Campbell, of Kearney; Galen Dodge, of Lincoln, and Edward LaCrosse, of Omaha.

The senator said he feels fortunate that through the years he has been able to combine education and government.

On the one hand, he said, those in government should be subject to the educational process. On the other hand, "those who teach government should use the laboratory that's available and that's right here in Lincoln."

P.J. Morgan Backers Open Campaign HQ

Omaha (AP) — P.J. Morgan has not officially announced his candidacy for Congress, but his backers opened a Morgan for Congress headquarters Tuesday. Morgan, a real estate man and Douglas County commissioner, was not present as Samuel M. Greenberg and Mrs. Don Lowe, chairmen of his campaign, held a news conference to open the office and introduce others who will assist the candidate.

In answer to a question, Greenberg said Morgan would officially announce his candidacy for the Republican nomination in the 2nd District congressional race on Jan. 19.

By United Press International

Two state senators in two days have said they may not seek re-election next year, citing poor pay for the amount of work involved as a major reason.

On Monday, Sen. Gary Anderson of Axtell all but bowed out of the 3rd District Democratic congressional race and also said there's a chance he may not even seek re-election to the Unicameral.

"If the salary were decent, I could get interested in staying a long time," Anderson said.

Tuesday, veteran lawmaker Richard Marvel of Hastings said he still hasn't made up his mind on a re-election bid.

"I have not ruled out running again," said Marvel, the Republican gubernatorial candidate last year who was first elected to the Unicameral in 1950 and since 1961 has served as chairman of the Unicameral Appropriations Committee.

And like Anderson, pay was cited as a major consideration.

"The main problem is making

State Senators Bowing Out, Citing Low Pay

a living while at the same time representing my district," Marvel said. "That means I must have at least two jobs."

The question then, he said, is "Can I do two jobs?" State senators are paid $400 a month and efforts to increase that amount have been rejected by voters both in the form of an open-ended salary provision and a flat pay boost. Pay increases must be accomplished by voter approval of constitutional changes.

Marvel said the Legislature "is a fulltime job that is very complicated and full of all kinds of problems."

He also has a job teaching at Nebraska Wesleyan University, also fulltime.

Back in the days of sessions every other year, the lawmaker said the job of representing a district wasn't all that difficult to combine with making a living, except for a few months every other year.

But annual sessions began in 1971 and those every year has been mentioned as a possible contender for the 2nd District seat being vacated by Rep. John McCollister.

Thus far, State Sen. John Cavanaugh of Omaha is the only announced candidate for the 2nd District seat.

No Plans Made To Close Down State Selective Service Offices

By United Press International

A state Selective Service official said Tuesday there are no plans at present to close any of the nine Selective Service offices in Nebraska.

Edwin Scott, deputy state director, disclaimed a report that the nine offices would be closed and said earlier plans to phase out six of the nine offices have been shelved for the present.

"As of now we don't know that we'll close anything at all," Scott said. He said a conversation with state Selective Service Director Ed Binder apparently was misunderstood and resulted in the reports of the nine closings.

Scott said there were plans at one time to phase out offices at O'Neill, Norfolk, Columbus, Omaha, Grand Island and North Platte, retaining offices in Scottsbluff, Kearney and Lincoln as well as the state headquarters in Lincoln.

However, Scott said, the phase-out orders were shelved pending release and action on the new federal budget early next year.

He said, "It may very well be that we'll wind up with one office in the state." But he said there will not be any planning until the terms of the new budget are known and Congress acts.

At its peak, Nebraska had 108 Selective Service offices and last year had 20, cut to nine this year.

Scott said more would be known about tentative plans for the national Selective Service System following a conference Binder will attend at the end of January. The conference, to be attended by state Selective Service officials, will be held in New Orleans Jan. 22 and 23.

Lewis of Daykin, Leon Kumor, of Grant, and Ralph Luebeck, of Stamford.

Reappointed to the advisory committee were Dr. Jack Campbell, of Kearney; Galen Dodge, of Lincoln, and Edward LaCrosse, of Omaha.

Exon Renames 7 To Groups

Gov. J. J. Exon announced Tuesday seven re-appointments to the Weather Modification Commission and the State Advisory Committee to the Office of Mental Retardation.

Reappointed to the weather commission were Judson Cornette, of Alliance; J. S.

P.J. Morgan Backers Open Campaign HQ

Omaha (AP) — P.J. Morgan has not officially announced his candidacy for Congress, but his backers opened a Morgan for Congress headquarters Tuesday. Morgan, a real estate man and Douglas County commissioner, was not present as Samuel M. Greenberg and Mrs. Don Lowe, cochairmen of his campaign, held a news conference to open the office and introduce others who will assist the candidate.

In answer to a question, Greenberg said Morgan would officially announce his candidacy for the Republican nomination in the 2nd District congressional race on Jan. 19.

Stereo Gear Stolen

Burglars pried open the front door to Custom Electronics, at 330 N. 13th, and took about $1,700 worth of stereo equipment late Monday night or early Tuesday morning, according to police reports.

State Senators Bowing Out, Citing Low Pay

By United Press International
Two state senators in two days have said they may not seek re-election next year, citing poor pay for the amount of work involved as a major reason.

On Monday, Sen. Gary Anderson of Axtell all but bowed out of the 3rd District Democratic congressional race and also said there's a chance he may not even seek re-election to the Unicameral.

"If the salary were decent, I could get interested in staying a long time," Anderson said.

Tuesday, veteran lawmaker Richard Marvel of Hastings said he still hasn't made up his mind on a re-election bid.

"I have not ruled out running again," said Marvel, the Republican gubernatorial candidate last year who was first elected to the Unicameral in 1960 and since 1961 has served as chairman of the Unicameral's Appropriations Committee.

And like Anderson, pay was cited as a major consideration. "The main problem is making a living while at the same time representing my district," Marvel said. "That means I must have at least two jobs."

The question then, he said, "Can I do two jobs?"

State senators are paid $400 a month and efforts to increase that amount have been rejected by voters both in the form of an open-ended salary provision and a flat pay boost. Pay increases must be accomplished by voter approval of constitutional changes.

Marvel said the Legislature "is a fulltime job that is very complicated and full of all kinds of problems."

He also has a job teaching at Nebraska Wesleyan University, also fulltime.

Back in the days of sessions every other year, the lawmaker said the job of representing a district wasn't all that difficult to combine with making a living, except for a few months every other year.

But annual sessions began in 1971 and those every year meetings, Marvel said, "make it more difficult to serve" for many, particularly those without substantial financial resources.

The senator said he feels fortunate that through the years he has been able to combine education and government.

On the one hand, he said, those in government should be subject to the educational process. On the other hand, "Those who teach government should use the laboratory that's available and that's right here in Lincoln."

Doyle Won't Run For 2nd District Seat

Tom Doyle, director of the State Department of Roads, said Tuesday he will not be a candidate for the Democratic congressional nomination from the 2nd District.

Doyle, an Omaha man who headed the Labor Department during the Tiemann administration before joining the Exon administration as roads director, has been mentioned as a possible contender for the 2nd District seat being vacated by Rep. John McCollister.

Thus far, State Sen. John Cavanaugh of Omaha is the only announced candidate for the 2nd District seat.

Acknowledging that he at one time was considering running, Doyle said, "I have no plans to run for Congress or the Senate. I can foresee no circumstances under which I would.

"For me it was a question of interest," he remarked.

Doyle said Hess Dyes and Omaha Mayor Ed Zorinsky will provide Democrat voters with a good choice in the U.S. Senate primary election next spring.

I TOLD YOU WE SHOULD HAVE CALLED A CAB!

THE JACKSON TWINS

by Dick Brooks

IT WAS DELICIOUS, BUT I'VE HAD ENOUGH THANK YOU!

MRS. FONTAINE AND I THOUGHT YOUR FOOTBALL BUS IDEA WAS VERY CLEVER, JAN!

I'M DYING TO SEE YOU TWINS TOGETHER. DO YOU STILL DRESS ALIKE?

NOT AS MUCH AS WE USED TO.

SHE'S NOT VERY BRIGHT, BUT AT LEAST SHE'S NOT COARSE!

I THINK I COULD MAKE HER QUITE PRESENTABLE IF CLAY GETS TO SERIOUS ABOUT HER!

NO, THANK YOU, MRS. SAVAGE. I ASSUME YOU'VE ASKED ME HERE IN MY PROFESSIONAL CAPACITY.

SO NICE OF YOU TO COME, MR. KIRBY. CAN I FIX YOU A DRINK?

INDEED I HAVE. I'M TERRIBLY WORRIED AND BELIEVE YOU CAN HELP ME...

IT'S MY STEPSON GARY, THE SON OF THE LATE MR. SAVAGE. HE HAS DROPPED FROM SIGHT AND I'M AFRAID SOMETHING HAS HAPPENED TO HIM...

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Romance, creativity, interesting life — all could figure prominently. You could also be seeing through a romantic haze. Remember that you will have to face your own figure prominently. The New Year will find you in a stronger emotional and financial position.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You get most pleasure from being close to family members and home. If you have a choice stick to familiar ground — and avoid excesses, including extravagance. You receive meaningful compliment from one who serves you. New Year brings end to burden you have been carrying with no credit for so doing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Accent on relationships, short to quick pranks, messengers, call attention of social Aries — and another Libra — play significant roles. Don't permit fast pace to create aura of carelessness. New Year

by John Prentice & Fred Dickenson

SO NICE OF YOU, MR. KIRBY, CAN I FIX YOU A DRINK?

NO, THANK YOU, MRS. SAVAGE. I ASSUME YOU'VE ASKED ME HERE IN MY PROFESSIONAL CAPACITY.

INDEED I HAVE. I'M TERRIBLY WORRIED AND BELIEVE YOU CAN HELP ME...

IT'S MY STEPSON GARY, THE SON OF THE LATE MR. SAVAGE. HE HAS DROPPED FROM SIGHT AND I'M AFRAID SOMETHING HAS HAPPENED TO HIM.

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 4 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 4, add 2. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

LAFF-A-DAY

THE GIRLS

by Franklin Folger

My mother taught me to never take money from strangers. May I know your name?

Well, it certainly wouldn't have hurt him to play one encore — all the time I spent on my gown letting out the waist.
